POE GETS A PLACE IN HALL OF FAME

Receives 69 Votes Out of 100, Tying Oliver Wendell Holmes for Second Choice.

MRS. STOWE IN THE LEAD

74 Votes for Her—Williams, Cooper, Brooks, Bryant, Frances E. Willard, Jackson, Bancroft, and Motley.

Edgar Allan Poe wins. Dr. John H. MacCracken, Chairman of the Senate of New York University, announced late yesterday afternoon that Poe's name and ten others had been added to the Hall of Fame by the votes of the 100 electors just counted. Poe received 69 votes; with Oliver Wendell Holmes, the next highest number any "candidate" received. Harriet Beecher Stowe, best known as the author of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," led the list. It is given here:

	Votes.
Harriet Beecher Stowe	74
Oliver Wendell Holmes	69
Edgar Allan Poe	69
Roger Williams	64
James Fenimore Cooper	62
Phillips Brooks	60
William Cullen Bryant	59
Frances E. Willard	56
Andrew Jackson	53
George Bancroft	53
John Lothrop Motley	51

Twenty-nine names were chosen in 1900; 11 names in 1905, and 11 names in the present election, making the total now inscribed in the Hall of Fame 51.

The total number of ballots cast this year was 97; the number required for choice was 51.

Those failing of election by less than 10 votes were:

	Votes.
Samuel Adams	41
Daniel Boone	42
Patrick Henry	44
Mark Hopkins	45
Francis Parkman	45
Charlotte Saunders Cushman	45
Lucretia Mott	41
Martha Washington	43

Gen. Sheridan received 33 votes and Noah Webster, 38. Dr. Morton, the reputed discoverer of anaesthesia, received 36 votes. William Lloyd Garrison, 35 votes, and Joseph Henry, 39.

Poe's vote jumped from 42 in 1905 to 69, an increase of 27 votes. Oliver Wendell Holmes jumped from 49 to 69, an increase of 20 votes, his competitors, Lowell and Whittier, having been removed by election. One of the extraordinary results of the canvass is that whereas the historian Motley gained four votes over the election of five years ago, the historian Parkman lost two votes.

One of the striking gains is that of Phillips Brooks, whose vote increased from 49 to 60, although no competitor in the same group had been elected in the meantime. The vote of 74 of Harriet Beecher Stowe is noteworthy, as no one received such a majority in the last election except Louis Agassiz, and in the first election the number was surpassed only by fourteen names, including Washington, Lincoln, Grant, Emerson, Longfellow, etc. As a result of this election, the author's corner, already the most populous, with the exception of the statemen's corner, doubles its population and goes far ahead of the statesmen in number, indicating the enduring quality of the author's fame.

Scientists Not Represented.

In the present election there is no representative of the Scientist Group or of the Soldier or Jurist Groups. John C. Calhoun, who received 46 votes in the last election, received only 42 in this election. Patrick Henry, who received 46 votes in the last election, received only 44 in the present election.

In the vote for women, the names chosen are those of women who were not eligible at the last election, not having been deceased ten years at that time. Of those who were voted for in the last election, Charlotte Saunders Cushman shows a gain from 39 to 45 votes; Martha Washington from 32 to 43 votes, and Lucretia Mott from 33 to 41 votes. Louisa M. Alcott gained one vote, increasing from 37 to 38.

The ballots of one Professor of History, one Publicist, and one Chief Justice were not received.

An analysis of the vote for Poe shows that of the 69 votes, 21 were cast by College Presidents, 17 by Professors of History and Scientists, 18 by Publicists, Editors and Authors, and 13 by Jurists. The percentage of votes for Poe was lowest in the Publicists, Editors, and Authors' groups. An analysis of the vote by location shows that New England cast 14 out of a possible 21, the Middle States 18 out of a possible 27, the Middle West 15 out of a possible 21, the South 14 out of a possible 18, and the West 8 out of a possible 10. Contrary to the general impression, therefore, Poe is as famous in the West as he is in the South. Since the last election, his fame increased more among College Presidents than among any of the other groups.

This is the complete ballot, with the number of votes cast for each nominee:

BISHOP FINED FOR SPEEDING.

Did Not Know That a Policeman Was Behind a Hedge.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Oct. 21.—Dr. Adolph, Bishop of Guildford, to-day was fined for driving a motor car at excessive speed and also for not having a license. He told the court that he was traveling over an exceedingly open road, where the least possible inconvenience could have been caused by his fast driving. "I have driven some 12,000 miles every year over difficult country," he said, "and submit for the consideration of the bench that with the best intentions in the world it is exceedingly difficult not to relapse one moment from one's diligence."

The Bishop added that he had forgotten to take out a license this year.

He caused amusement later by an ingenuous statement at a meeting this afternoon, at which he arrived late. He explained his delay by saying, "I was obliged to attend a police court to answer to my delinquencies. I don't want you to think me too disreputable a person. It was in a very lonely part of the country and I didn't know that a policeman was behind a hedge."

MISS GAYNOR HURT IN HUNT.

Miss Gertrude's Wrist Sprained When She Is Thrown from a Horse.

The discovery by friends of Miss Gertrude Gaynor, daughter of Mayor Gaynor, that she had one of her wrists bandaged, brought out the fact yesterday that she had been injured by a fall from her horse while hunting at Smithtown, L. I., on Wednesday. Miss Gaynor makes light of her injury, which is painful, but not serious.

She joined in a hunt at Smithtown on the day she was injured. Mounted on her favorite hunter, the Mayor's daughter was leading the chase when her horse stumbled, throwing her to the ground in such a way that her wrist turned under her. The horse recovered himself and did not fall, so that Miss Gaynor escaped possible injury by having the animal roll on her. She picked herself up and pluckily declared that, with the exception of a pain in her wrist, she was uninjured and quite able to resume her place in the hunt.

Friends, however, advised her to return to the Mayor's home at St. James, L. I., and have the injured wrist treated. She did so, and expects the pain to disappear in a few days, although her wrist is still somewhat swollen.

31 YEARS AN ILLEGAL WIFE.

Court Declares Void the Marriage of Mrs. Susan Elson Dye, Now 72.

Susan Elson Dye, who said she had been married to Joseph E. Dye on June 13, 1867, in Jersey City, by the Rev. Dr. D. H. Lawrie of the Emory Methodist Episcopal Church, had her claims to wifehood declared void yesterday by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court. She is 72 years old.

The Appellate Division took away an award of alimony and counsel fee made to the woman by the Supreme Court in her suit for divorce from Dye, who is 70 years old, a civil war veteran, a member of the Old Guard, and a wealthy retired commission merchant.

The decision finds that Dye's wife, Martha M. Spencer, whom he married in 1863, did not die until 1883 and was never divorced, although she left him in 1865. The court finds that the woman who sued Dye was divorced by William H. Dukehart in 1865 and was forbidden to marry again in New York. She lived with Dye until 1898, a period of thirty-one years, as his wife.

COUNTESS STRANGELY HURT.

In Chicago Hospital, Countess de Beaufort Said to Have Fallen Downstairs.

CHICAGO, Oct. 21.—It was learned today that the Countess Irma de Beaufort, daughter of M. H. Kilgallen of this city, is in St. Luke's Hospital here. It was said that she would soon be out, but the hospital authorities declined to explain her injuries.

A report that the Countess had fallen downstairs at her father's home was the subject of newspaper investigation yesterday, but no member of the family would talk.

To-day John Rouse, who said he was a chauffeur for Mr. Kilgallen, explained in the Municipal Court that he was speeding yesterday to take physicians to St. Luke's Hospital when he was arrested.

This led to the discovery of the Countess. The injured woman's husband, Count de Beaufort, was badly bruised recently by a fall from his horse while in New York.

ELECTRIC INDUSTRY GROWS.

Investment in Light and Power Stations Doubled in Six Years.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 21.—The remarkable growth of the electric light and power industry in the United States from 1902 to 1907, inclusive, is revealed in statistics compiled by the Bureau of the Census just issued.

The cost and equipment of central power stations throughout the country in 1907 represented $1,096,913,622, or double that of 1902. In that time the horsepower capacity more than doubled—4,032,365 against 1,830,594,—while the output of stations in 1907 was 5,862,276,737 kilowatt hours, against 2,507,051,115 in 1902.

The number of incandescent lamps in use in 1907 was 45,991,336, as compared with 19,636,729 in 1902, and of arc lamps, 635,815, against 415,561. The incandescent lamp has largely superseded the arc lamp for street lighting purposes. A comparison of the number of reports received from stations in 1907 with the number in 1902, shows an increase of 53.6 as compared with 23.4 for the commercial companies.

FILLING STRIKERS' PLACES.

Missouri Pacific Marches in Men Imported from Chicago as Strikers Leave

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 21.—Simultaneously with the walking out of the boilermakers, pipemen, and blacksmiths of the Missouri Pacific and Iron Mountain Railroads today, in sympathy with the 1,200 striking machinists, the companies received three carloads of men from Chicago to fill the vacancies.

The walkout of the mechanical workers was general along the lines of the roads. Reports to the roads' headquarters are that all members of the three unions obeyed the orders of their Presidents to strike.

General Manager A. W. Sullivan said that the walkout would not have any material effect on the train service, as he was filling the places of the men who walked out.

THOMPSON ASKS BEMIS TO RESIGN

Water Commissioner Declares His First Deputy Is Too Extravagant for the City.

HIS APPROPRIATION CUT

Wanted $467,000 to Run His Department, but $50,000 Was Considered Sufficient—Reputation Extensive.

Water Commissioner Thompson, it was learned last night, has asked for the resignation of Prof. Edward W. Bemis, the water supply expert whom Mr. Thompson made one of the Deputy Commissioners on his appointment by Mayor Gaynor. The reasons given by the Commissioner are the expensive manner in which the professor has been conducting the Water Waste Bureau and a disagreement between them over a certain type of meter.

The Commissioner had not intended to announce his action until the matter was settled, but an account of the trouble appeared in an evening newspaper last night.

"I have seen the article, which has evidently been inspired by Deputy Commissioner Bemis," said the Commissioner at his home in the Belnord last night. "It is true that I have asked him to resign. I have done so with the knowledge and approval of the Mayor. I see that the article says that his position has become too expensive. As a matter of fact, it was too expensive. His large saving in the way he has conducted his water waste detection melts away if it is figured what the saving of water costs the city instead of what the water sells at.

"This has been proved by the fact that the Board of Estimate apparently realized this very fully, as they have cut his estimate in the budget for the work to be performed in 1911 from what he asked, $467,000, to $50,000. In his estimate for water waste detection in Richmond alone he asked $90,000, and the total collections in the revenue of the department in that borough are only about $180,000, so he would practically have to stop the use of all water in the borough to show results, which is an absurdity.

"The article says that the Standard meters have been restored by me. They were approved many years ago by the authorities and confirmed by the Board of Aldermen as the charter requires. Mr. Bemis took it upon himself to keep them out of the city, and I have simply restored them to their rights so that no favoritism could be shown to any of the meter companies."

Prof. Bemis is regarded throughout the country as an authority on water supply matters. He was for years at the head of the Water Department in Cleveland, Ohio, which is said to have one of the model systems in the country.

When Commissioner Thompson appointed Prof. Bemis, Mayor Gaynor declared that the city was very fortunate in having obtained his services. He was placed at the head of the Water Waste Bureau, which the new Commissioner created, and it has appeared on the surface that he was saving the city a large amount of money monthly.

MAYOR REMOVES BILLARD.

Fire Department Official Accepted Money to Pass on Building Material.

Mayor Gaynor directed Fire Commissioner Waldo yesterday to remove H. W. Billard, Acting Deputy Supt. of Buildings of the Fire Department in Brooklyn and Queens, on charges of accepting money for his approval of roofing material.

The case was brought to the Mayor's attention by R. R. Mabie, President of the Rochelle Roofing Company, who complained that Billard had refused to approve certain materials used by his company in work for the department, and that when a representative of the concern protested Billard agreed to accept money from Mabie. The case was turned over to Commissioner of Accounts Fosdick for investigation and he reported against Billard.

In his report to the Mayor Commissioner Fosdick recommends that the case be turned over to the District Attorney.

CABINET HAS LONG SESSION.

Sits Late Over Much Routine—Taft Registers at Cincinnati by Affidavit.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 21.—The members of the Cabinet, except Secretary Dickinson, who has not yet returned from the Orient, and Secretary Meyer, who is inspecting navy yards on the Pacific Coast, attended the usual Cabinet meeting this morning at the White House. The meeting lasted until an unusually late hour owing to the mass of routine business.

The rest of the day the President devoted to various conferences. William E. Griswold, secretary of the Stock and Bond Commission, appointed to prepare a plan for controlling railroad stock and bond issues, called on the President and discussed the commission's progress at some length. John Barrett, Director of the Bureau of Pan-American Republics, also called and discussed Latin-American affairs with the President, in view of Mr. Taft's coming trip to the Canal Zone. Later the President had a long talk with Frank B. Kellogg, who is in charge of the trust cases, and went for a ride with him. The President also talked politics with Senator Cullom of Illinois and Representative Foster of Vermont.

The President has made all his preparations for voting in Ohio before leaving for the South. Last night he registered by affidavit, according to the law of that State, and he will leave Washington on Nov. 7 for Cincinnati. The next day he will be an early voter and return at once to the capital. On Nov. 10 he will start South for Panama, where the whole situation in the zone, particularly the question of fortifications, will be carefully studied.

"MONK" EASTMAN FREE.

Old-Time Gang Leader's Period of Parole Ends—He'll Go West.

ALBANY, N. Y., Oct. 21.—"Monk" Eastman, for years the leader of a notorious east side gang in New York, left Albany to-day a free man. Eastman was sentenced to Sing Sing Prison about eight years ago for assault, and was released on parole last February. Since then he has been reporting regularly to the local police. His parole expired to-day.

Before leaving Eastman told Chief Hyatt he was going to New York to see some of his old companions, and then intended to go "to the wild and woolly West."

$100,000 FOR CHURCH UNITY FROM MORGAN

New York Banker, Made Treasurer of World Conference Fund, Starts It.

CONVENTION ENDS WORK

In the Closing Hours Deputies Deny Suffragan Bishops Right to Vote —Meeting Here in 1913.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, Oct. 21.—J. Pierpont Morgan furnished the climax to-day to the triennial convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church by giving $100,000 to the campaign fund for the world's conference on church unity.

Mr. Morgan had been named Treasurer of the movement to raise funds required to bring about what is hoped will be the greatest world's conference of Christian churches, and shortly before leaving for the East to-night he made the official announcement that he started the fund with a gift of $100,000.

The House of Deputies declined to vote favorably on allowing the suffragan Bishops the right to vote with the House of Bishops, deciding that they must act merely as assistants to the Bishops.

Deputies say privately that they cannot see how these Bishops should have the right to vote over them, because a great many of the suffragans will be colored men who will work in the colored sections of the larger cities.

This was an unlooked for action on the part of the House of Deputies, inasmuch as the friends of the suffragan Bishops were supposed to be seated in the House of Deputies.

The resolution introduced yesterday in protest of the treatment of Jews in Russia was adopted.

It was to the strains of "Publish Glad Tidings" that the session ended. The deputies had finished all business, and were awaiting word of the adjournment of the Bishops. One of the clerical members of the lower house arose in the back part of the hall and started the hymn.

Before he had finished the opening phrase, all the delegates, numbering nearly 500, were on their feet and clergymen and laymen, including financiers, lawyers, Judges, bankers, and business men, added their voices to the precentor's. Mr. Morgan was observed to join in the singing.

As the last notes were reached Secretary Hart of the House of Bishops entered the hall with a message that the sessions of the higher order of church officials had ended. Five minutes later the deputies were pouring from their hall.

Closing exercises of a devotional order were held later in the day at St. Paul's Cathedral, at which Bishop Tuttle of St. Louis and Bishop Doane of Albany were the principal speakers. The convention meets in New York in 1913.

TURNED HIS STEAMER BACK.

Capt. Fenton's Wife Died After He Brought Her Home.

Mrs. O. B. Fenton, daughter of the late Daniel Montgomery, and wife of Capt. Fenton of the Standard Oil steamer Hudson, died at her mother's home, 166 Amity Street, Brooklyn, yesterday. Mrs. Fenton accompanied her husband on his last trip to China, leaving here on July 28. When thirty-six hours out of port she was taken with a paralytic stroke.

There being no physician on board, Capt. Fenton at once turned back toward land, and for a 300-mile run into Narragansett Bay the firemen and coal passers worked without ceasing, and with double pay until the ship docked. Mrs. Fenton was taken to the home of Grant C. La Farge, the architect, and from there to her mother's home.

When Capt. Fenton left his ship the first officer, J. S. Johnson, took command for the China trip. It is understood that the Standard Oil Company has written an approval of the Captain's action.

Mrs. Fenton was a talented musician, and some years before her marriage, she was organist at the Floating Church of Our Saviour at the foot of Market Street.

GIRLS USE FIRE ESCAPE.

Took No Chances When They Saw Fire and Smoke on Floors Below Them.

Believing that escape by the stairs was cut off, four girls employed on the eleventh floor of a building at 151-155 West Twenty-fifth Street, fled to the rear fire escape when smoke and flame burst last night from the windows of the ninth floor. They climbed down the ladders, and although dizzy and frightened they retained their presence of mind and safely reached the ground. The fire was extinguished with a loss of about $200.

The girls were Ellen Hurley of 998 Bedford Avenue, Brooklyn; Edith Lieder of 501 Eldridge Street; Helen Baier of 122 West Fourteenth Street, and Millie Toffer of 135 Seventh Avenue. The fire was confined to the rooms of the Rich and Sayles Cloth Manufacturing Company, on the ninth floor.

START SEARCH FOR MISSING BALLOONS

Canadian Government and Hudson Bay Co. Seeking Aeronauts Now Up More Than 100 Hours.

FEAR MEN MAY STARVE

Azurea, Dusseldorf II., and America II. the Craft Unreported—May Have Landed in Georgian Bay.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Oct. 21.—Relief expeditions to search for the pilots and aids of the three missing balloons, Azurea, Dusseldorf II., and America II., which started in the international race here Monday and which apparently have been lost, will be started from Toronto, Ont., Sunday, if no news is received from them before that time. This announcement was made to-night by officials of the Aero Club of St. Louis.

The crews of the balloons are Lieut. Emil Messner and Leon Gwandar in the Azurea; Lieut. Hans Gericke and Samuel E. Perkins in the Dusseldorf II., and Allan R. Hawley and Augustus Post in the America II.

News was received here to-day that Lieut. Gov. Gibson already had communicated with Sir James Whitney, the Premier, who agreed to notify the Chief Constables and forest rangers to keep a sharp look out. The Lieutenant Governor, however, expressed the opinion that all the Ontario Government could do to locate the aeronauts necessarily must be slight owing to the wildness of the northern part of the country.

The German balloon Germania, Capt. Hugo Von Abercron, pilot, and August Blanckertz aid, landed at Coocoocache, Quebec, Wednesday morning. This is approximately 1,195 miles from St. Louis, and may mean that all records have been broken. It is certain, if the reports are true, that all world's records in competition have been eclipsed.

Col. Theodore Schaeck and Paul Armbruster, who landed with the balloon Helvetia at Ville Marie, Quebec, are en route to Montreal, satisfied that they have outdistanced all competitors by several hundred miles.

"We were forty-six hours out when we landed," said Col. Schaeck. "We could have gone further, but it was the only settlement we could see for a long stretch of country, and we decided to alight."

The aeronauts reported that several persons had fired at the balloon during the trip.

The America II., the only American entry unreported, carried only thirty-five bags of ballast. Aeronauts here do not believe it could remain in the air eighty-seven hours, the time since it left here Monday until 9 o'clock this morning.

The situation in reference to the unreported balloons assumed a serious aspect to-night. It is believed that the men have landed somewhere in the wilds of Canada, where they may be the victims of starvation before succor can reach them.

The Aero Club to-night called upon Gen. Fred Allen, Chief of the United States Signal Corps at Washington, to have the revenue cutters patrolling the Great Lakes took for wreckage in Lake Huron. Steamship companies which have vessels plying Lake Huron and Georgian Bay have been requested to join in the search.

The Hudson Bay Company has replied favorably to the request that its men look for the aeronauts, as has the Canadian Government.

It was announced to-night that a representative of the Aero Club would be sent to Toronto to organize the relief expeditions.

All of the balloons should have been down and reported by Wednesday night, according to Aero Club officers, and the fact that more than a hundred hours have elapsed since the start of the race, and three pilots have not reported, has given rise to grave apprehension for their safety.

It was pointed out that the greatest danger is anticipated in the case of a balloon having descended in Georgian Bay.

This stretch of water contains more than 30,000 islands of all sizes, where the aeronauts might perish before relief could arrive.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Oct. 21.—Convicted of official dishonesty, Daniel Shaughnessy, Sr., for nine years one of the principal Assessors of Cambridge, was sentenced to-day to eight months in the House of Correction by Judge Almy of the District Court. Shaughnessy appealed and was held in $500 for the Superior Court.

Shaughnessy was convicted on four counts charging larceny of $152. It is alleged that he took money from women taxpayers for abatements and converted it to his own use.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 21.—The Russian and Ottoman Governments have agreed to submit their differences on the question of debts due Russian subjects arising out of the war of 1877 to The Hague Tribunal. The State Department was so advised to-day by the American Embassy at St. Petersburg.

Two delegates will be appointed by each country. These four delegates will select a President of the arbitral court and will arrange the date for holding sessions at The Hague.

Killed by Eating Quince and Milk.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Oct. 21.—Eating a raw quince which he had put in a bowl of milk caused the death of Henry Reetz, a young artist, early this morning at his home, 820 Grove Street. He was attacked with violent pains in the stomach four hours after he had partaken of the dish, and suffered intense agony. He had been married only four months.

Kentucky Says American Co. Held Out Franchise Tax on $61,000,000.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Oct. 21.—Suit was filed here to-day by the State revenue agent against the American Tobacco Company for corporation franchise tax for the last five years on the ground that the company misrepresented facts in its annual reports to the State Auditor.

The company, it is alleged, reported $118,931,000 issued capital stock when its authorized capital stock is $180,000,000. Upon this diference of $61,000,000 the suit is brought for taxes.

A 50,000-TON STEAMSHIP.

Cunard Company Said to Have Approved Plans for One.

LONDON, Oct. 21.—It is reported that the Cunard Steamship Company has definitely approved plans for the construction of a new steamer of 50,000 gross tonnage, to be 1,000 feet long, and have 90,000 horse power.

The announcement was made by the Cunard Line in June that the company proposed to build one, and perhaps two, 60,000-ton steamships of 1,000 feet in length. Sir Alfred Booth, Chairman of the Cunard Line, has said that the steamships of the future would be of 50,000 tons. It is for such a vessel that the cable announces the plans for construction have been approved.

Mrs. Lucile T. Sheardown of 216 West Ninety-ninth Street was arrested in Yonkers yesterday afternoon on a charge of reckless automobile driving, following an accident in which her automobile ran over Patrick Christopher of 4 Orchard Street, Yonkers. Christopher had his right leg broken, and sustained other injuries. He was taken to St. Joseph's Hospital.

Mrs. Sheardown told Detective Beck that her car was going at a moderate rate of speed. She was very much affected by the accident. After the circumstances had been explained to Acting City Judge Ellis he paroled Mrs. Sheardown in her own custody.

The accident occurred on Riverdale Avenue near Fernbrook Street. Mrs. Sheardown, who was returning to New York, was herself operating the car, the only other occupant being her sister-in-law, Mrs. M. T. Sheardown of Riverdale. Mrs. Sheardown telephoned for an ambulance.

THRILLING AIR FEATS AT BELMONT PARK

Spectators Watch Agape Practice Flights by Entrants for International Contest.

READY FOR OPENING TO-DAY

Hoxsey, Grahame-White, and Radley Test the Air Lanes Over the Course —Frisbie Flies from Garden City.

A foretaste of what is in store for the spectators at the opening of the international aviation tournament at Belmont Park to-day was provided yesterday, when Hoxsey, Grahame-White, and James Radley, the two former in biplanes and the latter in a Blériot monoplane, darted about the air lanes above the field at the same time, causing their machines to glide, dip, and buck until it seemed at times as though Grahame-White and Hoxsey would be thrown from their seats. Then, when everybody else had landed and it seemed as though it had become too dark to fly successfully, J. J. Frisbie, driving a modified Curtiss biplane, dropped easily and gracefully into the field after an eleven-minute trip from the aviation field at Garden City, seven miles away.

It was the last day of practice before the opening of the meet, and the airmen who were lucky enough to be on the ground with machines already assembled made the most of it. Many of those who will compete in the tournament were forced to take the part of spectators, as their craft either had not arrived or had not been assembled. Among these were the Count de Lesseps, Charles K. Hamilton, J. B. Moisant, Capt. Baldwin, and Tod Shriver. They will all be ready today, however.

For the first day of the meet this programme has been arranged:

Hourly distance	1:30 to 2:30
Hourly altitude	1:30 to 2:30
Hourly distance	2:45 to 3:45
Hourly altitude	2:45 to 3:45
Daily duration	1:30 to 2:30—2:45 to 3:45
Fastest flight	1:30 to 2:30—2:45 to 3:45
Grand altitude, 4 o'clock.
Cross-country, 4 o'clock.

Several who saw Radley rise from the ground yesterday and speed over the international course of three miles declared that he was without doubt the winner of the speed contest. He arose from the turf within forty yards of his starting point and was off immediately at top speed. He contented himself with a circuit of the course, however, remarking as he landed that he had found his machine in perfect order.

Grahame-White in his Farman biplane, and Hoxsey, in the Wright "touring car" without the front control, were in the air when Radley ascended, Hoxsey, particularly, arousing the spectators by his apparently reckless feats of flying.

He headed straight for the grand stand, but when within seventy-five feet of it tilted his machine almost straight up in the air, and turning as though on a pivot, shot off in the opposite direction. At times he rose to 800 or 900 feet, only to glide swiftly to earth again in a long dip. Grahame-White was flying a craft belonging to Clifford B. Harmon, and he contented himself with steady circuits of the course, on which he kept his craft so steady on its keel that it seemed scarcely to quiver.

J. Armstrong Drexel, in his Blériot monoplane made what was probably the fastest time over the international three-mile course, covering the distance in 3:39 2-5, according to the timers present. When he regained the field he dropped to within five feet of the turf, and at this height sped along for 100 yards or more, exhibiting complete control of his speedy craft.

Ralph Johnstone, another Wright flier, presently took the air in a Wright biplane of the orthodox type. It was nearly dusk when he ascended, but he made several circuits of the course, attaining great heights, only to dip quickly to earth again.

Among the visitors to the flying grounds were the recent arrivals from France, Rene Barrier, Rene Simon, Emile Aubrun, and Edmond Audemars. They supervised the unloading of their machines, which arrived two days ago on the Niagara. Fully forty mechanicians were at work uncrating the machines and beginning to assemble them for to-day's contests. One of the most interesting sights, to the crowd of aviators at the grounds, was the first appearance in America of the tiny Demoiselle, the flying machine designed by Santos Dumont. Both Roland Garros and Edmond Audemars will operate these swift "humming birds" in a series of exhibitions. The rivalry between these two operators is keen.

Alfred Leblanc, who cut short his flight in the Gordon Bennett balloon race by landing yesterday in Ontario, is hastening to New York, to take part in the aviation tournament.

At the flying grounds last night every aviator said that his machine would be in readiness for flight, before 12 o'clock to-day. The grand stand has been decorated, and everything is in readiness for the formal opening of the first international meet to be held in this country.

WINS AVIATION SUIT.

Ludlow, Himself an Airman, Gets a Verdict for Another Aeronaut.

Special to The New York Times.

HEMPSTEAD, L. I., Oct. 21.—Israel Ludlow, the lawyer and aviator, who was severely hurt while trying to fly some time ago, won a case for William H. Patterson in the Nassau County Supreme Court here to-day. It is the first aeroplane suit which has come up in this county.

Patterson alleged that when some months ago he became an aviator he ordered a motor from the Harriman Motor Works of South Glastonbury, Conn. He alleged he paid down a $260 deposit, and that when the motor failed to materialize he filed suit.

He received a verdict of the amount of the suit to-day, together with $109.56 costs.

BRIBE-GIVER CONVICTED.

Fire Department Chief in Jail for Buying an Alderman's Vote.

SALEM, Mass., Oct. 21.—James A. Hamilton, Chief of the Lawrence Fire Department, was found guilty on one count of an indictment charging bribery in the Essex County Superior Court here to-day. The count on which the verdict of guilty was returned alleged that Hamilton paid Alderman Legendre of Lawrence $100 in return for Legendre's vote for Hamilton's appointed as Fire Chief.

Judge Schofield sentenced Hamilton to State Prison for not less than two and a half years nor more than four years. In imposing sentence, the Judge said that this case was more serious than that of Mayor White and other Lawrence city officials, who were convicted of attempted bribery, inasmuch as Hamilton was convicted of actual bribery.

Mayor White and several other officials are serving terms in jail.

THE HOFFMAN HOUSE IN RECEIVER'S HANDS

Proprietors in Default of Interest on $150,000 Mortgage on the Furniture.

OTHER CREDITORS' PETITIONS

The Misses Cadagan, Who Run the Hotel, Approved the Receivership—Trouble Came from Rebuilding.

The Hoffman House, at Broadway and Twenty-fifth Street, went into bankruptcy again yesterday for the second time within a dozen years. On the petition of Charles A. Dards and three other mercantile creditors, whose claims aggregate about $3,000, Judge Holt, in the United States District Court, appointed Frederick C. Laughlin, a lawyer of 165 Broadway, as receiver with a bond of $20,000. Stephen B. Rosenthal, who was counsel for the petitioning creditors, will be his attorney.

This receivership is reached immediately because of a default in the payment of interest on a mortgage of $150,000 on the hotel operating company, the official title of which is The Hoffman House, New York, covering the furniture and fixtures put into the place two years ago, when the hotel itself was rebuilt by the Gerry estate and the Kinney estate, which own the ground and the building, and refurnished in part by the Misses Cadagan, who lease the property and manage it. Miss A. Cadagan, the active partner in the operation of the hotel, through ex-Judge Hatch as counsel, joined in the receivership as the best way out of financial difficulties under which the Hoffman House has been laboring ever since the rebuilding.

By way of explanation Miss Cadagan told the lawyers this last night:

"The trouble started when the hotel was rebuilt. We had to close down a large part of the house just at the time when the hotel business was booming, and we reopened it during the depression following the panic of 1907, when the other hotels were feeling the strain severely and one of the largest hostelries in Fifth Avenue had six floors closed entirely. Our rent has been $16,000 a month, which under these conditions has been impossibly high for a hotel as far downtown as the Hoffman House."

The troubles that resulted in yesterday's receivership became acute several months ago, when it appeared that some kind of a compromise had to be reached with the big provision, grocery, and general hotel supply firms currently dealt with. There was a meeting of the creditors called, and an extension of time was granted under which operation was continued in the hope of an improvement of the finances of the Hoffman House. But recently the management had to default in the payment of the interest on the $150,000 mortgage, and that brought matters to a crisis. John B. Stanchfield, the lawyer, is trustee for the holders of the $150,000 bonds, whose indenture gives them the right to take physical possession of the property at any time when a default in interest occurs without going into court, and accordingly on Wednesday a representative of the law firm of James, Schell & Elkus, attorneys for the trustee, visited the Hoffman House and posted up this notice:

> The trustee of the mortgage by the Hoffman House, dated April 23, 1908, is in possession of all property covered by the mortgage.
> JAMES, SCHELL & ELKUS,
> Attorneys for Trustee.

When this action came to the attention of the mercantile creditors they at once prepared for a petition in bankruptcy, and yesterday's appointment of a receiver was the result. The list of creditors embraces most of the big provision and hotel supply firms in New York and includes Park & Tilford, Acker, Merrall & Condit, Zahn, Zayles & Co., Hunter & Trimble, Jacob Ruppert, and many others.

After the receiver had been appointed he went, in company with Mr. Rosenthal, to the Hoffman House and sought to find out just what kind of possession had been taken by the representatives of the bondholders. Except for several of the notices posted up around the hotel no visible signs of this possession could be discovered and no individual was in charge under the mortgage. The receiver accordingly took possession.

It was said last night that the liabilities of the hotel would be from $350,000 to $400,000, including the bonds on which default has been made, and that while the lien of the bondholders covered the furniture and fixtures, it did not affect the lease, which has five years to run, the cash on hand, or the supplies. There is a fund of $65,000 on deposit with the owners of the property to guarantee the lease, and this also probably is outside the lien of the bondholders.

The interested parties declined to make a prediction last night as to what the outcome would be, beyond stating that Judge Holt had directed the receiver to continue the operation of the hotel. It is expected, however, that a composition will be worked out with the creditors and a general readjustment made of the finances. The last time the Hoffman House was in the hands of a receiver was in 1898, when it stayed under the protection of the court for about two years.

NEW POLICE HEADS QUICKLY GET TO WORK

No Ceremonies Mark the Inauguration of Changed Regime at Headquarters.

DRISCOLL BLAMES McCLELLAN

Tells Mayor It Was His Lack of Support Which Demoralized the Department of Weights and Measures.

Mayor Gaynor reached his office in City Hall yesterday in a buoyant mood. When anybody asked him about the police situation he smiled.

At Police Headquarters the new Commissioners smiled also, but none of the three who were starting on the job of bossing the 10,000 men of the uniformed force would drop the slightest hint as to who is going to be who in the revolutionary realignment, which it is expected will be made.

John Purroy Mitchel, President of the Board of Aldermen, who last week seemed much put out about the police and more put out about the Mayor, smiled also, and so did Commissioner of Accounts Fosdick, who upheld Mr. Mitchel in the issues which arose between him and the Mayor over the matter of police changes.

The three new police heads, Commissioner Cropsey, First Deputy Driscoll, and Second Deputy Flynn, found no flowers awaiting them at their offices on their first day of duty, which they begun at 9 o'clock yesterday morning, all three arriving at Police Headquarters at about the same time.

The new Commissioner hid himself in the recesses of his private office and sent word to all but policemen that he was too busy getting acquainted with his job to receive callers.

First Deputy Commissioner Driscoll wanted to visit the Bureau of Weights and Measures in the morning to see his old chief assistant, F. H. Tighe, who is now aemporarily bossing the department He, ran down the headquarters stairs three steps at a time, and asked for an automobile at the front door. A doorman, who has been long on duty there, led the new Chief Deputy back into the building and down the long northern corridor to the automobile entrance. An auto with engine already chugging was standing there.

"For automobiles, Mr. Commissioner," said the doorman "always step this way from the elevator."

Mr. Driscoll laughed and jumped aboard. When he was head of the Bureau of Weights and Measures autos were among his perquisites. He had on occasions borrowed the Borough President's automobile truck to cart away fake scales, but the nearest he had come to a passenger auto was when the Street Cleaning Department lent him an old one.

When Second Deputy Commissioner Flynn arrived at Headquarters he was plied with questions about his policies, and he said they were to take off his coat and roll up his sleeves and spend three weeks at least getting acquainted with his work.

The new administration took on a businesslike air from the hour the doors on the north end of the second floor in Police Headquarters closed behind the men who are to have charge of the department. The only flowers that arrived came late in the afternoon, when Commissioner Cropsey received a bouquet from some one in Brooklyn and Second Deputy Flynn got a nosegay with greetings from some of his old Government associates.

Mr. Flynn left Police Headquarters a few minutes after his arrival, going direct to the nearest telegraph office. When he returned at noon he said he had telegraphed his resignation to the Government as local head of the Secret Service, and was now in full possession of his new office.

Of the outgoing Commissioners, Baker, Bugher, and Kirby, only Mr. Kirby visited Police Headquarters. He came to "pass his shield over the counter," as it is expressed in police circles. Mr. Kirby had not resigned as had the others, his notice that he was to be supplanted arriving after his successor had been appointed.

Government Lent Flynn's Services.

Mayor Gaynor, in discussing the case of the new Second Deputy yesterday, intimated that Mr. Flynn had been borrowed from the Federal Government for a season. The Mayor indicated that he might go back to his old place in the Secret Service after completing his tour of duty with the city police.

Two letters were made public by the Mayor yesterday, one from Clement J. Driscoll to the Mayor, resigning the place of Commissioner of Weights and Measures, and, incidentally, attacking the administration of ex-Mayor McClellan, and another from the Mayor replying to it. The latter indicated that the Mayor had had Mr. Driscoll in mind for a police place for some time, and had so notified him. It was the only indication that the appointments had been under extended consideration.

No one could be found yesterday who would say he had had any idea who the new Police Commissioners were to be. The appointments had apparently come as a complete surprise to eve nthe best-informed of the higher officials of the force. That a "shake-up" was impending every one had known for months, as Mayor Gaynor had often spoken privately, it is said, of his dissatisfaction with Commissioner Baker, whom he is said to have referred to as "McClellan's man," for whom he was not responsible, as he had found him in office and had retained him against the advice of many friends who had offered assurances that Mr. Baker was not playing the part of a loyal subordinate in carrying out the Gaynor police reforms.

The general feeling in the City Hall yesterday was one of relief that the friction between Mayor Gaynor and President Mitchel of the Aldermen had apparently been adjusted. Members of the Board of Estimate and several Aldermen referred to the new appointees as a group of men in whom Mr. Mitchel could take great satisfaction. It was said that he had long admired Driscoll and was a cordial supporter of both Commissioner Cropsey and Second Deputy Flynn.

Called a Victory for Mitchel.

The opinion seemed to prevail that the outcome of the police fight was a good deal of a victory for Mr. Mitchel. Men who have watched many administrations at City Hall intimated that the swift descent of Mayor Gaynor upon Police Headquarters Thursday followed his investigation of the report of Commissioner Baker upon which the Mayor made certain allegations which Mr. Mitchel characterized as untrue. It was said yesterday that the Mayor no longer believes that the list of disorderly houses sent by Mr. Mitchel to Commissioner Baker for investigation was compiled from an old list "made up in the office of a sensational newspaper," as he once wrote, or that Mr. Mitchel and Mr. Fosdick were working in co-operation with any newspaper.

An announcement made at City Hall last night strengthened the view that Mr. Mitchel and the Mayor were on agreeable terms again. It was to the effect that Mr. Mitchel is to have Policeman Phelan, his confidential attendant, returned to him through the reversal of Commissioner Baker's order of Wednesday reducing him in rank and sending him to patrol duty at the Mercer Street Station. Explanations accompanying the announcement of Phelan's forthcoming reinstatement to his former rank as a first-grade detective and his restoration to duty in President Mitchel's office were to the effect that ex-Commissioner Baker's order was issued without the knowledge or sanction of the Mayor. The order, it was said, had much to do with the fact that Mr. Baker was summoned three times to the Mayor's office on Thursday, and finally sent back to turn over the department to his successor.

Driscoll Confers with Schmittberger.

First Deputy Driscoll, after his trip to his former office, returned to Police Headquarters for a protracted evening session with Chief Inspector Schmittberger. On leaving Headquarters at 10 o'clock Mr. Driscoll was questioned by reporters.

"My conference is of no particular significance," he said. "I am simply trying to get onto the ropes. The police building is pretty full of ropes, you know, and some of them are pretty knotty ones. I didn't have much chance to get officewise in the day. All I did was sign my name, and I guess I signed it 4,000 times. I'm coming down every night for a spell just to get the swing of things."

Earlier in the day Mr. Driscoll was asked if he was going to clean up the police situation and the vice situation as he had cleaned up the weights and measures situation. His reply was a question: "Well, we cleaned that situation up, didn't we?"

Driscoll Blames McClellan.

Here is the extract from Mr. Driscoll's letter of resignation which the Mayor gave out:

> You were quite right, Sir, when you said that short weights existed all over the city, but unfortunately the blame was laid at the door of the Inspectors of this department, where the blame did not belong. The blame belonged at the door of the previous administration; yes, at the door of his Honor Mayor McClellan himself. This office is a branch of your office and can be made just what the Mayor desires it should be. The influence of the Mayor can be for good or for evil. The records of this office show, and the confidences of the men prove, that at no time during the administration of the previous Mayor was there anything that even resembled support given this bureau; on the contrary, certain persons surrounding Mayor McClellan were doing all in their power to hamper efficiency in this bureau.

To this letter the Mayor replied:

> Oct. 21, 1910.
> Dear Mr. Dricoll: Your letter of Oct. 20, is at hand. When I made known to you before going on my vacation that I had in mind to transfer you to the Police Department on my return, I did it with much reluctance on account of the splendid work you had done in reorganizing the Bureau of Weights and Measures, and making it completely efficient, because I did not see how I could get some one to fill your place. But I felt that even a greater field of usefulness was open to you in certain work in the Police Department, and I am now as confident in your integrity and that you will do that work as I was in your integrity and ability to do the work of the Bureau of Weights and Measures when I appointed you to the head of it. I trust that with your help I shall be able to appoint a man to succeed you who will be able to hold the Bureau up to the standard which you have created for it. Sincerely yours,
> W. J. GAYNOR, Mayor.

The last order of ex-Commissioner Baker before leaving the department was No. 285. It sent to service in Brooklyn Joseph Cliff and Robert Powers, Commissioner Baker's two confidential men in headquarters, and promoted Henry V. Callahan to the rank of first-grade detective.

The first visit of one of the new Commissioners to a police station was made by First Deputy Driscoll, who made a speech to the men in the Oak Street Station as they were being sent out on post. He told the men he was their friend and hoped they would not be afraid of him and would always feel free to come to him and discuss their troubles.

MOB FREES A SLAYER AFTER STORMING JAIL

Failure of Jury to Convict Widow of Moore's Victim Aroused Sentiment for Him.

TAKEN TO THE MOUNTAINS

Deputies Pursue Rescuers and Rescued and Virginia Governor Offers a Reward for His Capture.

Special to The New York Times.

LYNCHBURG, Va., Oct. 21.—John Moore, who was condemned recently to be executed on Nov. 25 for the murder of Frank Howl in Nelson County on May 14 last was taken from the Nelson jail at Lovingston, thirty-five miles from here at 1 o'clock this morning by a friendly mob and carried back to his home in the mountain part of the country where, it is thought, he has been liberated. Two Deputy Sheriffs followed the mob and the murderer for ten miles, but turned back when the mountain country was reached.

Later, spurred on by an offer of $300 reward by Gov. Mann, five other men started in pursuit, but it is not believed that any determined effort to rearrest Moore will be made, because of the dangers attending such an undertaking.

Judge Gordon, who is holding court in an adjoining county, has ordered an investigation in the hope of learning who were in the mob, but it is not thought any arrests will result from this.

The mob, composed of seventy-five men, approached the village of Lovingston from several different directions. Three of the members went to the jail after the remainder had been secreted near by.

With crowbars and hammers they had brought two big doors were opened and Moore, trembling with fear, was taken out of the cell. He expected to be lynched, but was reassured, and the mob left without arousing the village. The telephone line leading into the section from which the mob came was found to have been cut in several places some distance from Lovingston.

It is evident that Moore was liberated because the jury recently failed to convict Mrs. Roxie Howl, widow of the murdered man who was indicted with Moore. Sentiment held her equally guilty and when she was acquitted, the mob organized to liberate Moore, although it was believed generally he poisoned Howl, in order that he might marry the widow.

Several months ago, Moore had to be secreted in the mountains for parts of two days and then carried to another jail for safekeeping. Moonshiners of his home section threatened to lynch him, because he stated that they had poisoned the liquor that caused Howl's death, believing he was a Government revenue spotter.

ALDRICH NOT BADLY HURT.

Doctor Says Senator, Hit by a Trolley Car, Will Be Out in a Few Days.

United States Senator Nelson W. Aldrich of Rhode Island, Republican leader of the United States Senate, was hurt badly on Thursday night by being run down by a southbound Madison Avenue trolley car at Sixtieth Street and Madison Avenue. The Senator is now confined to his bed at the home of his son, Winthrop, 540 Park Avenue, and under the care of Dr. Holbrook Curtis of 118 Madison Avenue.

This statement was issued by Dr. Curtis yesterday in response to inquiries as to the Senator's condition:

> Senator Aldrich sustained a cut over the left eye extending to the forehead. He was badly bruised on the face and about the head. The wounds were sutured. There were no internal injuries, and the patient is suffering from a slight shock. He will be able to be up and about in two days.

Senator Aldrich was alone, and it is said he has no clear idea of how he was injured. He had boarded the car downtown to go to the home of his son, and upon leaving it at Sixtieth Street started west instead of east in the direction of his son's home on Park Avenue. When he discovered his error and started to retrace his steps he did not notice a southbound Madison Avenue car that was approaching. Before he realized his danger he was struck and hurled several feet into the street. For a time following the accident he was unconscious.

A passer found Senator Aldrich struggling to his feet and summoned an ambulance from the Presbyterian Hospital, in which the Senator was removed to his son's home, a block distant. Three surgeons, among them Dr. Curtis, were summoned, and for more than an hour they are said to have worked over him.

Many rumors were current following the report that Senator Aldrich had been run down. One was that he had been hit by an automobile and suffered internal and other injuries that might prove fatal. This rumor was silenced by Dr. Curtis's statement, in which no mention was made of any internal injuries, and in which the early recovery of the Senator was forecast.

One of the first to be notified of Senator Aldrich's accident was his son-in-law, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., who was among the first to reach Winthrop Aldrich's apartment after the accident. He remained there several hours. Other friends also were notified and called during the night, remaining in the house until assured that Senator Aldrich was in no danger. Two physicians remained at the bedside until morning.

Senator Aldrich, who arrived in this city several days ago to visit his son, recently returned from Europe, where he went following his hard work in the last Congress.

SCHROEDER DENIES WHAT FOELKER SAYS

In Sing Sing He Testifies That He Made No Offer of a Bribe to Vote on Race Track Bills.

HE DID TALK TO FOELKER

Asked to Do So by Senator Hasenflug—Then "Al" Hobley Said, "Leave Him to Me," and He Did, He Says.

The Legislative Investigating Committee paid a hurried visit to Sing Sing Prison yesterday. In the Warden's office they took the sworn testimony of Frederick Schroeder, former Quarantine Commissioner, who is serving a sentence for stealing money from the Eagle Loan and Savings Company of Brooklyn, of which he was Vice President.

Schroeder is a ruddy-faced old man, upon whom the prison life seems to have rested lightly. He denied the story of former State Senator Otto G. Foelker that Schroeder had offered him $50,000 to vote against the Hart-Agnew anti-race track gambling bill, which became a law in 1908, despite the efforts of the turf interests to defeat it.

Schroeder told the committee that he did approach Foelker in 1908 at the request of Conrad Hasenflug of Brooklyn, then a member of the State Senate, and that he wished merely to learn how Foelker stood on the anti-race track gambling bills. He said, too, that ex-Sheriff Alfred T. Hobley of Kings County agreed to "take Foelker in hand," and that he, thus relieved of the responsibility, lost interest.

Schroeder had many other details to relate. Before he finished there was a friction between the Democratic and Republican members of the committee, which was the first outward indication of differences between them.

In the prison yard and in the workshops near the Warden's office were 1,800 convicts engaged in their daily tasks. Some of them were serving terms for crime against the ballot box and other offenses in which politics played a part. But none of them knew that a legislative committee was within the prison walls taking testimony of one of their number. The convicts do not read the newspapers or they might have known.

All the committee except State Senator Victor M. Allen arrived at Sing Sing shortly before noon. Senator Allen had been called away. Chairman Merritt and his fellow-members and the committee's counsel, M. Linn Bruce, Isadore J. Kresel, and Alfred Hurrell, were received in the office of Warden Jesse D. Frost, and arrangements were made to have Schroeder brought up from the correspondence department, where he is employed as a clerk.

Private Confab with Prisoner.

Assemblyman Merritt and the committee's counsel were not quite ready to have Schroeder testify. Accompanied by the Warden, they left the office and for twenty minutes or more were closeted with Schroeder in one of the private rooms. And while this was going on the other members of the committee and the squad of newspaper men, photographers, and sketch artists cooled their heels in the antechamber.

Finally Chairman Merritt and the lawyers came back, and after a pause Schroeder entered, accompanied by a keeper. There was nothing about him except his prison garb to indicate the terrors of prison life. Every one in the room remarked the absence of the prison pallor. The old man's eyes, too—he is 65 years old—were bright and alert, and they met the eyes of the committeemen frankly.

Instantly there was a concerted move by the sketch artists, but Warden Frost checked them. He announced that no sketching or photographing would be allowed, and that unless the artists and photographers would agree to this they would have to leave the room.

Mr. Bruce administered the oath to Schroeder and began to ply him with questions. Schroeder said that he had been Quarantine Commissioner fifteen years, and that his office was at William and Cedar Streets, Manhattan, at the time of the Foelker episode in 1908. He said that he had known Otto G. Foelker for five or six years, and that his former residence was in Foelker's Senatorial district. He also knew Frank J. Gardner, the former State Senator, who is under indictment for attempting to bribe Foelker to vote against the anti-race track gambling bill. Schroeder toyed with his prison cap and looked intently at Mr. Bruce while the latter read Foelker's testimony of Wednesday last before the legislative committee. In this testimony Foelker had sworn that Schroeder had offered him $45,000 and then $50,000 as a bribe, and that Schroeder became flushed when he (Foelker) refused and after exclaiming that a million dollars could not bribe him, hastened from Schroeder's office.

Schroeder's Statement.

"And now, Commissioner," began Mr. Bruce, "the legislative committee, knowing that it could not get you to come down to New York, have come up here to give you the opportunity to make any statement you desire concerning this transaction, if such a transaction occurred."

"On a Sunday, I don't remember the date, I had just finished dinner at my home, 169 Pulaski Street, Brooklyn, when the telephone rang," said Schroeder. "I went to the 'phone. It was Senator Hasenflug at the other end of the wire, and he said to me: 'Fred, what's the matter with that damn Senator of yours?' I knew he must mean Senator Foelker, because I lived in his district and had known him several years. I said: 'I don't know.' He said to me: 'Some people are saying he's going to vote on our side and some say he's going to vote for the bills.' And then he said: 'We've got to have him. We need him.'

"'All right, Connie,' I replied, 'I will try to find out about it.'

"The following day, Monday, I went to my office, at William and Cedar Streets, and got my secretary to call up Senator Foelker and say that I would like to see him—not as Senator Foelker has said 'on an important matter'—but that I wanted to see him. An hour or two later Senator Foelker came to my office, and I said: 'Otto, how do you stand on the race track bill? They want you.' Senator Foelker said: 'What do you think about it?'

"'I'll tell,' I replied. 'If you have any future political aspirations you can't afford to vote against the bill, but if you haven't then it's different. I'll tell you what, I'll talk to Al Hobley about it.' And the following day I saw Al Hobley. He said: 'Leave him to me. I'll attend to him.'

Passed to Senator Hasenflug.

"I then called up Senator Hasenflug and told him to deal with Hobley, as he had named him for the Senate, and he could handle him better than I could.

"That is the only time I ever talked to Senator Foelker about the matter. As to $45,000 or $50,000 being mentioned, it never was."

Q.—When that first conversation with Hasenflug occurred, was he in the Senate at the time. A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—You had known him some time? A.—Yes, Governor.

Q.—Was anything said by Hasenflug that led you to believe that what he wished you to do was to feel out Foelker, and see if he was in a receptive mood? A.—When Senator Hasenflug called me up and said, "We need him" I presumed it was wished to get persons for a consideration. He never said anything about money, though. He only said, "We need him and must have him."

Q.—What did you say to Foelker about Senator Hasenflug? A.—I told him that Senator Hasenflug had said they needed him very badly.

Q.—And you told him that if he wasn't going to stay in politics he could do as he pleased about the bill? A.—Yes, Sir. I told him that if he didn't need his constituents any more he could do as he pleased.

Q.—Didn't you say to him that rumors were afloat of a large amount of money to beat the bill, and that if he wasn't going to stay in politics he could afford to vote against the bill? A.—I don't remember just what was said by Senator Foelker and by me, but I am sure that I did not say that.

"I don't think either one of us thought it necessary to mention that Senator Foelker would get money for his vote," said Schroeder after a pause. "That was understood. I knew that he knew as much about the situation as I did. I knew that if the voted against the bill there would be something in it—autos, no doubt, even airships, maybe. I knew that if anybody voted against the bill, under such circumstances, it would mean a consideration."

"Did Senator Foelker say to you that he had already been approached by Gardner?"

"No, Sir. He never mentioned Senator Gardner. I thought I was the first man to see him on the subject."

Mr. Bruce wanted to know if Schroeder in his second conversation over the telephone with Hasenflug said "I've seen Foelker and think you can get him," and then referred him to Hobley.

Schroeder admitted that he did.

"Did Hobley send any word to you as to how the matter was turning out?" asked Mr. Bruce.

"No," replied Schroeder.

Where the Democrats Came In.

Schroeder said he never had another conversation with Foelker, and added: "I never cared which way the bill went."

And then he told of a trip from Chicago just after the Republican National Convention in 1908. Sheriff Hobley and others, including Schroeder, were on the train. He said that some one happened to mention that Foelker had aspirations to be Governor of New York. When Hobley heard this, said Schroeder, he began to use abusive language and said some things about Foelker until friends advised him to stop.

Assemblyman Toombs of the committee wanted to know who asked Hobley to keep quiet about Foelker.

"I can't tell you," said Schroeder. "It was when Gov. Hughes was a candidate for the Presidency, and some one said, 'Foelker is going to be a candidate for Governor and he is Hughes's choice.' Hobley took it seriously and began to talk about Foelker."

Senator Robert F. Wagner, one of the Democratic members of the committee, took Schroeder in hand.

Q.—When Hobley spoke to you over the telephone, did he mention money? A.—No.

Q.—You said you assumed that money was to be paid. What did you mean? A.—I assumed so from the newspaper talk and the impression generally.

Q.—Did you say anything to Foelker at all that he would get money if he voted for the bill? A.—No. Only that if he voted against the bill it would kill him politically.

Assemblyman Foley, a Democratic member, asked:

"Did you have any conversation with Senator Gardner about the race-track bill?"

"No, I never talked to Senator Gardner about the bill. I seldom saw him, anyhow."

Then came the tilt between the Republican and the Democratic members.

"When you said that Hasenflug said, 'We need him,' whom did you mean by 'we'?" asked State Senator Alexander Brough, Vice Chairman of the committee.

"I suppose he meant 'we Democrats.'" replied Schroeder. "'We' meant, I suppose, McCarren & Co. and Grady & Co., or whatever they call them."

"He meant the Democrats," said Senator Brough.

There was a hum of protest from Senator Wagner and Assemblyman Foley, the Democratic members, but before they could voice their feelings Chairman Merritt turned to Senator Wagner, with a smile, and asked:

"You want to ask any more questions, Senator?"

A Truce Between Partisans.

"Now, please don't let us make this thing partisan," exclaimed Senator Wagner.

"No, don't," chimed the Assemblyman Foley.

"No, that's right," said Chairman Merritt.

"You know the Democrats voted for the anti-race-track measure, I suppose?" said Senator Wagner, turning to Schroeder, and the convict nodded.

That ended the examination. As the guard placed his hand on Schroeder's shoulder and started with him toward the door leading to the long tiers of cells Schroeder held out his hand to Assemblyman William W. Colne, one of the committee.

"How are you," he exclaimed.

Colne shook hands and said he was glad to see Schroeder looking so well. And then the guard led him away.

A pleasantry between a Democratic and a Republican member of the committee occurred just before the hearing.

"What's the population of Sing Sing?" asked Senator Wagner. Some one replied that 1,800 convicts were there.

"Why, the Tammany majority here is more than 2,000," remarked Assemblyman Toombs.

"I guess if you took a poll here you'd find the Old Guard in the majority," rejoined Senator Wagner.

The committee and its counsel were entertained at luncheon by Warden Frost, and afterward they were shown through the prison. Returning to New York later in the afternoon, the committee met in executive session at its headquarters, in the Liberty Towers Building, and decided to hold an open session this morning in the City Hall.

Although no definite announcement has yet been made, it is probable that the Legislative Committee, after its hearing to-day, will adjourn until after election.

Former Senator Conrad Hasenflug, at his home at Enfield Street and Jamaica Avenue, East New York, last night denied all that Schroeder had told the committee concerning him. He said he had no conversation by telephone with Schroeder about the race-track bill; that he was not interested in the bill, and that he had neither approached any one concerning it or been approached.

ROBBED OF $150,000.

Oneida Man's Room in Los Angeles Hotel Ransacked and Strong Box Taken

Special to The New York Times.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Oct. 21.—M. W. Hazelton, a wealthy tourist from Oneida, N. Y., who has been living at a hotel at 631½ South Main Street, reported this afternoon the theft from his room of $150,000 in stocks and non-negotiable securitis, also a certificate of deposit from the First National Bank of Oneida of $500.

The certificate, by forgery can be converted into cash. Hazelton, who is 75 years old, kept the property in a small steel box which he left in his bureau drawer. He was reputed to have $1,000 in cash, and he believes the impression exists that he kept all his money in the small box.

Shortly before noon to-day he left his room, and when he returned he found the door had been forced with a jimmy and the place ransacked.

PANAMA LIBEL SUIT IN SUPREME COURT

Government Lodges Brief Appealing Against Quashing of Indictment of The New York World.

CASE COMES UP ON MONDAY

Wickersham Argues That the Federal Courts Have Jurisdiction Here to Punish a Corporation for Libel.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 21.—The Government to-day filed its brief with the Supreme Court of the United States in its appeal from the judgment of the District Circuit Court which quashed an indictment against the Press Publishing Company (The New York World) for criminally libeling former President Roosevelt, President Taft, Charles P. Taft, (the President's brother,) Douglas Robinson, (Col. Roosevelt's brother-in-law,) and William Nelson Cromwell, in connection with the purchase of the Panama Canal. The brief was signed by Attorney General Wickersham and James C. McReynolds and Stuart McNamara, special assistants.

When the case was called for argument the attorneys concerned obtained a postponement until Monday. The case was not reached until so late in the afternoon that the argument could not have been completed to-day had the attorneys proceeded. The present plan of the court is to hear the case after the rendering of opinions on Monday.

The Press Publishing Company, which issues The New York World, was indicted on March 4, 1909, the specific charge being that the alleged libelous publication was circulated within the Federal area of West Point. In New York State there is a statute against criminal libel, and on the ground that the alleged offense came within the scope of the State authority the Circuit Court quashed the indictment. From that decision the Government is now appealing.

"The substantial question," the brief says, "is whether the United States courts have jurisdiction to punish a corporation which printed in the City of New York a newspaper containing a libel, criminal under the laws of the State of New York, and circulated copies of the same within the Federal territory of West Point."

"In effect," proceeds the Government's brief, "the published articles charge that Charles P. Taft, Douglas Robinson, and William Nelson Cromwell, with J. P. Morgan and others, acting through an American syndicate, obtained control of the securities of the French company which owned the Panama Canal route and its properties for the approximate sum of $3,000,000."

The Government brief takes sharp issue with the contention that the admission of the right of the Government to prosecute in any jurisdiction within which the alleged publication circulated is an undue hardship to the defendant.

"The inconvenience which may be suffered by criminals," says the brief on this point, "has not generally been regarded as adequate reason for permitting them to operate without restraint."

The Government's claim is based on an act of Congress of 1898, which the Government urges "operates to transfer the State law to Federal territory for the purpose of punishing acts committed there which, if performed outside and in the jurisdiction of the State, would be amenable to its laws."

A brief for the Press Publishing Company was filed by De Lancey Nicoll of New York and associate counsel. This brief contended that even though the language of the act of 1898 were literally broad enough to cover the case, it should not be so construed for several reasons. The first of these was that the "general acquiescence of legal minds for nearly a century in the negative of the proposition forbids the construction now for the first time asserted by the Government."

"During this period we have passed through the most momentous events of our history," said the attorneys. "Four wars have been fought, we have lost three Presidents by assassination, we have passed through twenty Presidential elections, we have survived a number of financial panics, but notwithstanding these and other crises in our National existence and all the fierce discussions of the press which accompanied them, no one has ever claimed till now that the courts of the United States have jurisdiction to punish a libel first printed, published, and circulated in one of the States, and which, in the course of a general circulation, has happened to penetrate into these Federal reservations."

Another reason advanced against the Government's construction was that "the whole history and life of the country is utterly at variance with any such construction." The necessary result of such a construction, it was contended, would be to confer upon the National authority a general control over the press of the country.

TO LOOK FOR A MILK TRUST.

Wickersham Takes Up Charges That a Combination Controls Pasteurization Plants.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 21.—Following sensational charges yesterday before the Commissioners of the District of Columbia by H. O. Trundle and Corbin Thompson, prominent local milk dealers, Attorney General Wickersham ordered to-day an investigation of the alleged Milk Trust. According to the two dealers who testified yesterday the trust has a capitalization of over $30,000,000, and includes many well-known financiers of New York and elsewhere. One object of the trust, it was charged, was to get the sale of pasteurization plants which they contended the trust sought to have made compulsory.

The testimony yesterday, however, was lightly regarded by the Commissioners who heard it, and several times they cautioned the witnesses that they were speaking of serious offenses, and something more than generalizations would be required.

WOMAN FUGITIVE FOUR YEARS

Teacher, Who Injured Pupil and Chose Exile to Paying Damages, Surrenders.

CHAMPAIGN, Ill., Oct. 21.—Miss Annie Kelly of Champaign, formerly a teacher at Tolono, after being a fugitive from the law for four years, has capitulated by paying over to William Burke of Tolono $1,000 damages. She is now free to go where she will, and the "Tolono School Case" is ended.

Because they alleged that Miss Kelly and her Principal, Sherman Cass, had seriously injured their fourteen-year-old boy, Michael, by whipping him, Mr. and Mrs. Burke sued and obtained damages of $1,800. After spending six months in jail, Cass paid $800, but Miss Kelly fled.

To the doors of the Supreme Court the young teacher took the case, pleading exemption under the bankruptcy laws, but the highest tribunal in the land ruled that Uncle Sam could throw no shelter around her.

"I've always wanted my daughter to pay up, but she was too much of a fighter to surrender," said her father, James Kelly, a prosperous retired farmer. "The Supreme Court decision, however, was the final blow to the spirit that had kept the young woman a fugitive from her home for four years."

By the terms of the settlement Miss Kelly paid over the remaining $1,000 of the judgment. She also paid the court costs. The Burkes have spent at least $5,000 trying to bring to justice the teachers whom they believe injured their boy. The defendants are out a similar sum.

MUST REPAY MINISTER.

Sandford Religious Colony Used Undue Pressure on the Rev. Ira Case.

BOSTON, Oct. 21.—Undue pressure and constraint exercised by men in the Sandford religious colony at Shiloh, Me., upon the Rev. Ira Case of Lynn caused the latter to turn over to the colony $1,055 in money and $500 worth of household goods, according to Attorney William E. Dorman, who has been sitting as Auditor in the suit of Mr. Case against the colony. The Auditor's decision, filed to-day, holds that Mr. Case can recover the money and property referred to.

Mr. Case and his wife joined the Sandford community some time ago. In order to gain residence in "the house on the hill top," where the elect of the holiness seekers dwell, Mr. Case handed to Mr. Sandford and his associates the cash and household goods.

Mr. Case is now living with relatives in Lynn. His wife sailed with Sandford to Palestine on the barkentine Kingdom and died while in Palestine.

EXPLAINS FERRY DEFICIT.

Only $800,000 This Year, Says Tomkins, and Will Decrease Gradually.

Dock Commissioner Tomkins declared in a speech at the budget exhibit yesterday that a wrong impression has been given of the expected deficit on the municipal ferries next year. It was deduced from figures submitted by him to the Budget Committee of the Board of Estimate a few days ago that the total would be at least $1,600,000. The Commissioner stated yesterday that it will be less than half of this and that the annual deficit will steadily decrease year by year.

"The deficit has been decreased by reducing the crews and economizing in every way possible in the purchase of supplies," said Mr. Tomkins.

"In 1911 it will be necessary to expend a large amount of money for necessary repairs to the boats as they have been neglected in the past and are in bad condition."

NEW YORKER HELD AS SLAYER

Edward Dupre's Auto Knocked Street Car Conductor from Running Board.

SALEM, Mass., Oct. 21.—The alleged carelessness of Edward Dupre of New York was responsible for the death of Samuel W. Hollingshead, a North Beverly street car conductor, last month, according to the finding of Judge Sears of the District Court, made public to-day after an inquest.

Hollingshead, while collecting fares on the running board of an electric car in Beverly was knocked off by an automobile and killed. Dupre, accompanied by Gen. Frederick R. Halsey of New York, passed through Beverly on the afternoon of the accident on an automobile trip from New York to Bretton Woods, N. H.

He is at liberty on bail awaiting trial on a charge of manslaughter.

VETOES PROBATION PLAN.

Mayor Keeps New Court Aids in the Competitive Class.

Mayor Gaynor disapproved yesterday the action of the Municipal Civil Service Commission in exempting the place of probation officer in the recognized minor courts of the city from the competitive class. It was believed that the Mayor would approve the resolution. In his letter of veto to President McGuire of the commission the Mayor declares that the greatest care should be exercised in preparing the examinations.

Pannonia Held in Quarantine.

The Cunard liner Pannonia, which arrived yesterday from Mediterranean ports, was detained in Quarantine nearly all day. A second cabin passenger was ill, and the Health Officer would not release the vessel until assured that there was no suspicion of cholera. Seventeen of the Pannonia's cabin passengers embarked at Messina, and some of this number had visited Naples, where cholera is prevalent. Each passenger was carefully inspected, and the Pannonia was not allowed to proceed to her pier until almost 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

RECORD DRAWN INTO JERSEY WATER DEAL

Candidate for Congress and ex-Prosecutor Has to Answer in Scandalous Belden Suit.

ORDER OF JUSTICE BIJUR

Works Sold to Jersey City Under Contract and Profits Involving $1,000,000 Are in Litigation—Long in Courts.

George L. Record, progressive Republican leader of Hudson County, N. J., and candidate for Congress, who challenged Dr. Woodrow Wilson, Democratic candidate for Governor, to debate, is being sued for $25,000 and an interest in a transaction that may represent close to $1,000,000, the profits of a Jersey City water deal. His notice of appearance has been filed in the New York County Clerk's office.

It was on Oct. 6 that Supreme Court Justice Nathan Bijur of New York signed an order directing that George L. Record be made codefendant in the suit of Belden against Belden. The plaintiff is George G. Belden, son of Henry Belden, and the defendants are William and Anne V. Belden, Charles D. Belden, George B. Salisbury, John J. Knox, William E. Sheffield, the Corn Exchange Bank, the Riverside Bank, Charles W. Coleman, Charles Donohue, Patrick H. Flynn, and George L. Record, the latter having just been added to the list.

The litigation is the outgrowth of a contract that was closed between the Jersey City Water Supply Company and Jersey City while Mr. Record was Corporation counsel of Jersey City, the city agreeing to purchase the water works constructed by the water company for $7,595,000. Papers in the case of George Belden against William Belden show that William Belden obtained his brother Henry's stock in the Jersey City Water Supply Company. He sold it to Patrick Flynn on Feb. 24, 1902, for $100,000. Of this Record, who represented William Belden, got $25,000. Record became Corporation Counsel of Jersey City on Jan. 1, 1902, nearly two months before the sale. The Appellate Division held unanimously that the methods by which William Belden got the water company interests of Henry Belden were fraudulent. William Belden came into possession of Henry Belden's stock through an assignment and a will drawn up by the late Charles Donohue, at one time Justice of the Supreme Court of New York County. Regarding this transaction Justice Clark spoke in scathing language.

"If these two instruments, the will and the assignment," he says, "had been drawn by Henry Belden, they would have furnished convincing proof of his mental soundness. But they were not his work. His hand, indeed, signed them, but they were the product of adroit minds, with a purpose. That purpose was to persuade Henry that he was doing one thing while in fact he was doing another."

The testimony of Record, which came before the Appellate Division, shows that he was especially active in the affairs of William Belden and the water company in the period to which Justice Clark refers. When Mark M. Fagan was elected Mayor of Jersey City, in 1901, Record was made Corporation Counsel and became especially interested in water.

William Belden was once the Wall Street associate of Jay Gould and James Fiske. His brother, Henry Belden, organized the water company in 1891, together with Patrick Flynn, the contractor.

Just before organizing the water company, it is said, Henry was in need of funds, and he was refused aid by his brother William. Fate reversed their conditions, raising Henry to wealth and impoverishing his brother William. In July, 1895, William asked his brother for financial aid, and Henry took him in at the time of the water deal. Henry was a physical wreck, and in August, 1899, being threatened with a judgment, he assigned his all to William. In 1892 William sold the interest for $100,000. Henry died in an insane asylum. Henry Belden, Jr., demanded an accounting of his Uncle William two years later, and the latter produced the will by which William, Charles, and Henry, Jr., were sole beneficiaries and sole executors. That will was later upset. The will was drawn by Charles Donohue, at one time Supreme Court Justice. He died last April. Steps were taken to have the will set aside.

The action was begun June 14, 1904, in the New York Supreme Court, and came to trial before Justice McCullen in January, 1908. The court dismissed the case and on appeal to the Appellate Division judgment was reversed and a new trial ordered. George Belden, in his affidavit, swears that Mr. Record received $12,500 on Feb. 25, 1902, and a like amount on June 30, of the same year. Record admits getting the money, but says it was his fee for acting as William Belden's counsel.

PARKER SPEAKS TO 3,000.

Says Graft Investigation in Other Hands Would Be More Effective.

AUBURN, N. Y., Oct. 21.—Alton B. Parker and Thomas M. Osborne, speaking in behalf of the Democratic State ticket addressed 3,000 people here to-night. Judge Parker said in part:

"All over the State there is rottenness and decay that needs to be exposed. Look at Schenectady, at Broome County, at Erie, at Oneida. As to the legislative investigation I say gentlemen that this investigation is partisan, and forced by public opinion. Think what would be disclosed by men hostile to that political organization."

TEN AUTOS AND GARAGE BURN

Proprietor Burned by Gasoline Explosions While Fighting the Flames.

DOBBS FERRY, N. Y., Oct. 21.—As the result of an explosion of gasoline in a garage on Cedar Street to-day Frederick Smith, the proprietor, was badly burned and the building and ten automobiles destroyed. Smith, who was alone in the building, said that flames shot out of the muffler of a car belonging to Col. F. Q. Brown, son-in-law of the late Robert Ingersoll, and caused the gasoline tanks to explode.

The flames communicated with a large tank filled with gasoline which stood in the rear of the garage, and that, too, exploded.

The garage was a one-story brick structure with a cement floor. One of the burned cars was the property of J. S. Gretsch of Dobbs Ferry, and another belonged to Mr. Einstein, a banker, of Ardsley.

After a vain attempt to put out the fire Smith made his escape from the building. He was taken to the hospital. He was delirious and his condition is said to be serious.

CRIPPEN VERDICT IS EXPECTED TO-DAY

Doctor, Cross-Examined, Clings to His Original Story of His Wife's Disappearance.

SUSPICION MADE HIM FLEE

Admits That His Statements to Her Friends Were All Lies to Cover Up a Scandal.

LONDON, Oct. 21.—The defense in the case of Dr. Hawley H. Crippen, charged with the murder of his wife, rested to-day with the summing up of his counsel, Alfred A. Tobin. Richard Muir will close for the prosecution to-morrow morning, after which the case will go to the jury. A verdict is expected to-morrow afternoon.

For four hours to-day Dr. Crippen was subjected to a searching cross-examination, lasting four hours, by Mr. Muir. He stood the ordeal well and clung to his original story. He gave his answers in a calm and well-modulated voice, and at no time did he lose his composure, though not, however, without an effort on his part. When he returned to the prisoner's dock he was deathly pale, and appeared to be almost on the point of collapsing.

The cross-examination of Crippen by Mr. Muir, one of the cleverest criminal lawyers in England, increased public interest in the proceedings. When Lord Chief Justice Alverstone, always punctual to the minute, entered the New Bailey courtroom, and the prisoner at the same time took his place in the dock, the spectators were already in their seats eagerly awaiting the contest between the keen lawyer and the cool doctor.

Mr. Muir, losing no time in preliminaries, asked Dr. Crippen whether he had seen or heard anything of his wife since early on the morning of Feb. 1. The witness replied in the negative, and in answer to further questions that were rapidly fired at him said that he could not prove any fact showing that she left the house alive. He supposed that she had gone to Bruce Miller, her professional acquaintance, who lives in Chicago. That was the only guess he could make. He made no inquiries. The witness said that he last saw his wife between 2 and 3 o'clock in the morning of Feb. 1, when they retired as usual.

That morning he prepared his own breakfast. Returning home in the evening, he found that Mrs. Crippen had disappeared, as she had threatened to do. He made no inquiries regarding the passengers listed on vessels sailing for America, nor had he since suggested that inquiries regarding the whereabouts of his wife should be made.

Mr. Muir suggested that if the witness's wife were alive she would call upon her sisters in the United States. Crippen's reply to this was that if his wife had gone with another man she would not have "the face" to go to her sisters. This opinion from the witness box drew forth a chorus of "Ohs!" from the spectators.

The doctor could not say whether his wife took any of her furs with her or if she had any quantity of furs and dresses.

Regarding the disposition of Belle Elmore's jewelry, the witness said he considered that he was quite entitled to tell Inspector Dew that he had not pawned his wife's valuables, as these had been purchased with his money, and he considered them as his property. He had used the proceeds of the sales to pay for advertising. He did not know what cash his wife had at the time she left him. "I asked her," said the witness, "if she wanted any money. She replied, 'No, I want nothing.'"

Counsel took up the subject of the letters and statements to Belle Elmore's friends which the husband had made regarding her death. Crippen admitted that all were lies to cover up a scandal. To Mr. Muir's suggestion that he had to play the rôle of a bereaved husband, he smiled and said: "That is for others to judge."

The witness suggested that it was possible that the human parts found in the cellar of his home had been placed there during the periodical absence of himself and wife.

It developed in the cross-examination that no time was lost in establishing Ethel Clara Leneve, the doctor's typist, in the Hilldrop-Crescent home. Crippen admitted that Miss Leneve had slept in the house on the night of Feb. 2 within twenty-four hours after his wife had disappeared.

Witness said that he resolved to go away on July 9, after realizing that suspicion had been directed against him. He feared that he might be arrested and jailed until she was found. He wished also to spare Miss Leneve, whom he persuaded to disguise herself and quit London, by explaining that the statement which he had made to Inspector Dew involved her as well as himself. He told the girl that there would be a scandal, and if his wife was not located that there would be trouble. The only way of escape was for both to start a new home together abroad.

Lord Chief Justice Alverstone and Counsel Muir plied the witness with questions regarding his use of hyoscin, a poison which the prosecution alleges was administered to Belle Elmore and caused her death. Crippen admitted that he had not purchased any hyoscin before or after the occasion, proved by the Crown, on which he admitted buying the drug. He could not name any patients for whom he had prescribed hyoscin.

When the defendent was excused from the box Dr. Turnbull, Director of the Pathological Institute of the Gordon Hospital, was called for the defense. He bluntly declared that the so-called scar on the body of the victim could not possibly be a scar.

Dr. Turnbull said that a microscopic examination had convinced him that the mark on the body had been caused by a folding of the skin under pressure. The Lord Chief Justice interposed with the remark that the witness differed from Prof. Pepper, who had performed hundreds of operations, and asked Dr. Turnbull whether he had ever operated. The witness replied that he had not.

Dr. Reginald C. B. Wall, Assistant Physician at the London and Brompton Hospitals testified that as a result of three examinations he had concluded that the disputed mark was not a scar.

Addressing the jury, Mr. Tobin reviewed the evidence at length, contending that in view of the conflicting testimony of medical experts it was impossible for the jury to find a verdict of guilty.

He said it was inconceivable that if Crippen murdered his wife and mutilated her body he should invite Miss Leneve to sleep in the house on the following day. Crippen had had only the night of Feb. 1 in which to dissect the body, bury the flesh, and get rid of the head and limbs. He must have known the risks of such a visit as Miss Leneve made.

TOMBO STIRS MUENSTERBERG

American Professors Have Lively Dispute in Meeting in Berlin.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Oct. 21.—German university men are busily discussing a lively dispute which took place the other night in a public meeting between Prof. Hugo Münsterberg of Harvard and Prof. Rudolph Tombo, Jr., of Columbia.

Prof. Tombo had delivered a lecture on the higher educational system of the United States and had dealt with considerable frankness with the worst side of the system, particularly the mediocre institutions which call themselves universities and colleges. He emphasized the lack of uniform organization of the schools, colleges, and universities as a prime defect of the American educational system. He said things were better the nearer one got to the Eastern coast, but in the South and Far West conditions often were indescribably bad.

Prof. Münsterberg, who is just about to begin his career as the exchange professor at Berlin University, took violent issue with Prof. Tombo. He said that the young Columbia instructor had overemphasized the deficiencies of the American higher educational system and had given the Germans a wholly false impression. Prof. Münsterberg thought that the very lack of uniformity was one of the advantages of the American system.

An extremely animated discussion ensued, wherefrom Prof. Münsterberg came off second best, as the distinguished audience, which included numerous professors of the Berlin and other universities, thought that Prof. Tombo had done the right thing in portraying American universities in such a frank and unbiased fashion. Some of the Germans present thought that Prof. Münsterberg was guilty of tactless and ungraceful conduct in taking issue so aggressively with his younger American colleague, who is just at the outset of his lecture tour of German universities as the official emissary of the Germanistic Society of the United States.

PRUSSIAN SCANDAL IN $18,000,000 DEAL

The Famous Tempelhof Parade Grounds Sold to Suburb When Berlin Wanted Them Badly.

MINISTER MAY LOSE HEAD

Press and People Roused Because Berlin Is to Lose Breathing Space—The Reichstag May Act.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Oct. 21.—What the newspapers are beginning to describe as a first-class political scandal is the outcome of the sale of the Templehof Field, a military parade ground on the southern outskirts of Berlin. Ugly rumors of graft are in the air, and reports were current this week that Gen. von Heeringen, the Prussian Minister of War, was threatened with the loss of his official head.

The Prussian War Department, in which the title to the field was vested, sold the property a fortnight ago for $18,000,000 to the abutting suburb of Templehof, which will proceed to cut the 500-acre tract into building lots. The sale was consummated in spite of vigorous protests from the City of Berlin, which offered to buy the field at the same price in order that a large section of it might be preserved for public park purposes.

Besides serving as an exercise ground for the troops of the Berlin garrison, which so many Americans have seen reviewed by the Kaiser each recurring May and September, the Templehof Field is the principal breathing space of the metropolitan working class population. Its contemplated disappearance threatens irreparable sociological and hygienic loss.

It was to prevent such a disaster that the City Council of Berlin was anxious to get possession of the field. The War Department, for some as yet dark and unexplained reason, preferred to deal with the comparatively insignificant and impoverished suburb of Templehof.

The suburb, which boasts a population of only 40,000, cannot begin to pay cash for the purchase, which is being financed by the great Deutsche Bank. The bank will therefore become the real owner of the property and will engineer the real estate speculation which will ensue as soon as the field has been subdivided into streets and building lots.

The press of the entire country is upbraiding the War Department for its refusal to listen to Berlin's claims. Numerous organizations of property owners have passed resolutions of protest, and dozens of petitions are in circulation praying that the Reichstag institute an inquiry into the deal and nullify it if not too late.

Popular opinion is thoroughly and unanimously opposed to the cavalier manner of the War Department in rejecting the City of Berlin's overtures, and Gen. von Heeringen will experience several strenuous hours when the subject comes up in debate in the Reichstag. One of the War Department's objections to dealing with Berlin is understood to be the fact that the City Council is controlled by the Radicals and Social Democrats, to whom the existing order felt it could not afford to make anything savoring of concessions.

Why Should YOU Buy Your New Suit and Coat at Loeser's?

WHEN THIS ADVERTISEMENT came to be written, we asked ourselves this question we have printed in the heading: "Why should men buy their winter suits and overcoats at Loeser's?"

Here are some of the answers that suggest themselves in a review of what we know about the Loeser Clothing.

Loeser Clothing is all made with the aim of steadily IMPROVING QUALITY rather than with the idea of cutting down prices. We would rather sell the BEST Suit anywhere sold for $15, $18, $25, or whatever the price, than to have a lower price than you find in other stores. All our effort is to PUT IN QUALITY rather than to take out something that will make a lesser price possible.

To this effort we bring a rather unusual experience—a definite and minute knowledge of the cost of fabrics and of every detail of manufacture.

The result is that we can get what we want from the makers and get it at the least possible expense. The result is that we have here Clothing of unusual excellence in style, in fit, in workmanship. The result is that we are satisfying many of the most critical men in this community, that they have a definite advantage when they buy their Clothes here.

The Clothes, of course, do their own best advertising. When a man is satisfied, he comes back again—and very frequently his friends come also. This advertisement is written in the hope that some men who have not heretofore worn Loeser Clothing will give some of these new Suits and Overcoats a chance to demonstrate just why we have so much confidence in their merit.

Suit and Overcoat prices range from $15 to $50.

WELLMAN TO LECTURE REFUSES VAUDEVILLE

As to Another Transatlantic Trial, He May Make One Next July.

PEARY CONGRATULATES HIM

Irwin and Loud to Be Features of a Moving Picture Show—The Cat on Land Legs Again.

After being literally overwhelmed with offers from vaudeville managers all over the United States, Walter Wellman informed a TIMES reporter yesterday that neither Mr. Vaniman nor himself felt able to accept any of them.

"Although," added Mr. Wellman, "many of them were very tempting, I have in view a short lecture tour and also some lectures in New York. The arrangements for my book have practically been concluded with a publishing firm here."

Asked if he had made any plans for another attempt to fly across the Atlantic, Mr. Wellman said that while nothing had been arranged, there was a possibility that he might have a try next Summer under certain conditions.

"I should like to go as early as possible in July," he went on to say, "so that the nights would be short. That would lessen the contraction of the balloon. In the arctic regions we had the midnight sun, which was a great help to us."

"Would you start from Newfoundland next time, instead of Atlantic City?" the reporter asked.

"No," replied Mr. Wellman. "I believe in doing the whole journey properly, and I am now confident that it could be accomplished under favorable weather conditions. I was amused to read in THE NEW YORK TIMES this morning, in a cable dispatch from Berlin, that Joseph Brucker said we failed to get across to the other side for lack of meteorological advice. If there was one point on which we were better posted than another it was on meteorological conditions. We had the records of the winds blowing over five degrees of latitude and five degrgees of longitude in the North Atlantic for the last twenty-five years and the advice of the most skilled weather experts in the United States. I see that Mr. Brucker is going to attempt to fly across in the trade winds from the Canary Islands to one of the West Indian islands. Well, that will not be very difficult. If he starts at a favorable time of the year, when the northeast trades are strong, he should make the journey in sixtyto seventy-two hours."

Mr. Wellman received the following telegram yesterday from Capt. Peary:

> South. Harpswell, Me., Oct. 20, 1910
> Walter Wellman:
> You have done a great thing. You will win yet. My sincere congratulations.
> PEARY.

Another telegram came from the American Exhibition Company at Atlantic City. It read:

> Walter Wellman:—We extend you again our sincere congratulations and good wishes and with it an invitation to yourself, Vaniman, crew and cat to come to Atlantic City on Saturday by the 12:30 train from Jersey City. A delegation representing the American Exhibition will welcome you on arrival and a suitable escort will accompany you to Cha[illegible]ute for a reception to citizens from 4:30 to 6 P. M. Dinner will be tendered you afterward by the directors of the American Exhibition, to which President Taft, Col. Roosevelt, Gov. Fort, and Mayor Stoy of Atlantic City, have been invited.

In reply, Mr. Wellman telegraphed:

> We greatly appreciate your good feeling and courtesy. We will be there with the cat. WALTER WELLMAN.

Announcement was made yesterday that Louis Loud, the first engineer of the America, and "Jack" Irwin, the wireless operator, had accepted an engagement to deliver illustrated lectures at the American Music Hall next week under the management of William Morris. The slides will be made from photographs taken on the trip of the airship from Atlantic City and from the deck of the Trent.

The cat Trent is still sharing the apartment of Mr. and Mrs. Vaniman at the Waldorf-Astoria, and is the subject of much solicitude among the women in the hotel. Numbers of them walk along the corridor in the morning and ask the maid if they can get a peep at the gray kitten. Owing to the many expressed designs of stealing the mascot, Mr. Vaniman keeps the kitten inside and does not permit it to wander about the corridors.

LeRoy Chamberlain said that the way the kitten came into the balloon was peculiar. "Billy" Bonsall, the night watchman at the hangar, while on duty one night at the end of June, saw a bundle dropped from an automobile in the roadway. He shouted out, but the car went on. When Billy walked over to look at the bundle he saw it move. Faint meouws proceeded faintly through the wrapping. The watchman was startled, but being a lifelong abstainer he soon calmed himself and opened the bundle. It contained two gray kittens. He took them into the hangar and fed them.

In August, two deerhounds were let loose in the hangar and one of the kittens was killed. Bonsall took care that the survivor should not share the same fate. When the America was installed, the kitten took up its quarters inside it and remained until the airship was abandoned at sea last Tuesday.

Mr. Chamberlain said yesterday that Trent had now recovered his land legs and could walk with comfort across the room. When he first landed in New York, the kitten walked stiffly at an angle of 45 degrees, with a strained expression on his face as if he were bracing himself against a gale of wind.

RESENTS BRUCKER'S CRITICISM.

Prof. Moore Says Equilibrator, Not Poor Meteorological Advice, Beat Wellman.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 21.—The statement made yesterday by the German aero navigator, Joseph Brucker, that Walter Wellman failed in his attempt to cross the ocean because he lacked good meteorological advice drew a reply to-day from Prof. Willis L. Moore, Chief of the Weather Bureau. He called attention to the fact that the hurricane coming up the coast, which, according to Brucker, struck Wellman's balloon, had nothing to do with his disaster, as Mr. Wellman and his party were rescued by the Trent before the hurricane had reached Cape Hatteras.

"Mr. Wellman failed in his venture because it is impossible, in my opinion, to cross the ocean with an equilibrator attached to a balloon," said Prof. Moore. "I agree with Brucker that with existing air craft nobody can cross the Atlantic north of the thirty-fifth parallel, because conditions simply will not allow it. In my opinion, the only feasible route would be to start from the west coast of Liberia and fly to the easternmost point of Brazil. This route would be in trade winds of a steady westward motion. and the distance across the ocean would be only one-half as long as the trip proposed by Mr. Wellman."

He said Brucker's proposed course from the Canary Islands to Porto Rico or Haiti and then over Cuba to New Orleans, while about 700 miles shorter than Wellman's, would not be in winds most favorable to the passage.

DODGED THE EQUILIBRATOR.

Crew of the Ada Bell Tell of Narrow Escape from Wellman's Craft.

NOANK, Conn., Oct. 21.—The auxiliary fishing schooner Ada Bell put in here to-night with a crew who could hardly wait to tell of a narrow escape they had on Sunday from being hit by the equilibrator of Wellman's airship America as they were fishing on the Nantucket Shoals.

Capt. Harry Christophson said there was a heavy fog at the time, and that when a large dark object appeared on their stern they first took it to be a particularly heavy bank of fog coming in. As the object approached they saw something bumping along on top of the water, and the motor in the boat was started just in time to get the boat out of the way, the airship passing not more than thirty feet from them.

The Captain could make out the members of the airship's crew, he said, but neither his crew nor Wellman's made any effort to speak, and the balloon passed by them and was soon lost in the fog.

The crew of the Ada Bell did not know that Wellman had started to cross the ocean until they put into port to-night, and thought that the airship had been blown out to sea and lost in the fog.

CONGRATULATIONS FROM PEARY

To the Editor of The New York Times:

SOUTH HARPSWELL, Me., Oct. 20.—My congratulations to THE TIMES and its colleagues on Wellman's great feat. Convey to Wellman my admiration of the splendid courage of himself and his men.

SHIPS SAFE IN PORT TELL OF HURRICANE

Passengers on the Brazos and Comus Had Terrifying Experiences.

STORM LASTED THREE DAYS

Without Lights or Wireless, the Brazos Nearly Hits Cuban Coast—Waves Swept Decks of Both.

The Southern Pacific steamer Comus and the Mallory liner Brazos which passed through the hurricane which swept the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean arrived yesterday. The Comus left New Orleans on Oct. 12 and the Brazos sailed from Galveston the same day. Both were four days late.

The Brazos reached her pier late in the afternoon, bearing many scars of the lashing she received. Every window on the port side of her hurricane deck was gone. The rails along her decks were bent and twisted. For seventy-two hours the Brazos fought the storm against almost overpowering odds. For three days and nights Capt. William F. Evans remained on the bridge, keeping the vessel under steerage way. Many of the passengers had given up hope of ever seeing shore again. The steamer rolled and tossed in the terrific sea, and the passengers were too frightened to be sick.

Even the passengers had to take a part in this fight to save themselves and the steamer. Water got into the vessel, poured down into the engine room, and ran into the staterooms above it. The passengers gladly volunteered to take their turn manning the pumps to fight the water which poured through the port window openings until it was two feet deep in saloon and cabins. To add to their fright the wireless was carried away with the first blast of the hurricane. On Saturday the electric lights went out, and for two days the Brazos, in darkness, plunged through the storm.

Stearing a course was impossible, and the Brazos was in danger of landing on the Cuban coast. When the storm passed, suddenly Havana appeared through the scattering clouds. Then Capt. Evans got his first bearings in three days. Morro Castle is sixty miles off the regular course of the Brazos, but her log shows that she traveled 182 miles from the time she left her course until she sighted the Cuban coast.

"It was the worst blow I ever experienced," said Capt. Evans. "The barometer registered 27.10, the lowest I ever saw. At the time of the Galveston flood the reading was 28.14. The storm struck us with indescribable fury. Water poured down the funnels. It looked as though the elements were trying to tear the sea up by the roots. There was no electrical display, but the rain came down by bucketfulls. The wind at times blew 100 miles an hour.

"Some of the passengers thought they were going to the bottom. They were of great assistance, however, when I ordered all hands to the pumps to stem the flood of water which poured through the port windows. The wireless was washed away with the breaking of the storm. Tuesday we managed to get the wires strung again. After splicing them together we found we could establish communication for a radius of seventy-five miles. Another twelve hours of blow and we would have ended our voyage on the Cuban coast.

"I cannot say too much in praise of the Brazos. I knew she would weather the storm, and she justified all my expectations."

Passengers and crew thought it remarkable that with the heavy tossing of the vessel no one was hurt seriously. One coal passer broke a knee cap and an oiler had a finger cut off in the machinery. None of the passengers was hurt.

Sergeant Michael M. Minchen, on his way from San Antonio on furlough, said that the last wireless message received on the Brazos was a storm warning which reached her when 145 miles off Dry Tortugas. The storm was upon them almost as the operator took down the message. Another passenger was Mrs. Sarah Bloomburg of San Antonio, who is traveling with her fourteen-year-old son. The passengers united in praising Capt. Evans and his crew.

The voyage of the Comus was equally strenuous. For three days the storm pounded her, but she rode the waves and reached port little the worse for her battle with the elements.

C. De F. Molyneaux, secretary to G. W. Luce, General Freight Agent of the Southern Pacific Company, who is on his way to San Francisco, said that for a time the Comus, her hatches battened down, steamed through seas which swept her continually from bow to stern. The Comus carried thirty cabin and thirty steerage passengers. During the height of the storm men and women kneeled and prayed for deliverance.

"Bad weather began on Thursday," said Mr. Molyneaux. "On Friday conditions became worse, and by Friday night we were in the thick of the hurricane, which Capt. C. M. Maxson said was the worst he had experienced in his seventeen years sailing up and down the coast. Great seas piled up ahead of us, broke inboard, and went thundering down the decks.

"Hatches were battened down and everything on deck made fast, but in spite of this the water forced its way into some of the staterooms. With the wind blowing a hundred miles an hour and the vessel rolling and pitching terribly, the outlook was blue. Even the Captain thought for a time we would not survive the storm. The passengers were frightened and men and women prayed for help."

For three days the Comus ran through the storm, lashed by the hurricane and pounded by the seas. On Saturday conditions improved, though wind and wave continued high, and there was not enough sun for an observation. An effort was made to find the vessel's location by soundings, but without result.

Weather conditions continued to improve on Sunday and Monday, and those on board gained in confidence. On Tuesday the Captain was able to take his first observation and headed for the Florida Straits. The Comus had been able to keep in wireless touch with the shore except for a time on Friday and on Monday, when the receiving apparatus was damaged.

The passengers said yesterday Mrs. Rene Cooper, an actress of Chicago, was the heroine of the voyage. When the storm broke on Thursday Mrs. Cooper sat at the piano and after singing popular songs sang hymns. She stayed at the piano all that night, keeping up the spirits of her fellow-travelers by singing. Some others joined with her.

Another passenger on the Comus was Mrs. James Corbin of Silver City, New Mexico. She is a sister-in-law of the late Austin Corbin, and is on her first visit here in twenty years. Her physician had advised the quiet of a sea voyage.

Upon the arrival of the Comus the passengers presented to Capt. Moxson resolutions praising him and his men for their work in bringing the vessel safely through the storm.

The freighter Ogeechee of the Texas City Steamship Company, which left Galveston on Oct. 13, has not been heard from. Her agents here believe she has put in at Brunswick, Ga. The Ogeechee carries no passengers.

LOSS OF LIFE YET UNKNOWN.

Storm-Beaten Vessels Still Creeping In—13 Known Dead—Many Missing.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Oct. 21.—Only the disasters at sea remain to be counted in obtaining complete reports of the damage done by the great hurricane which swept this State early this week.

The tale of shipwrecks is not expected to be complete for a week. Thirteen drowned in shipwrecks is the most authentic count at hand to-day, including those reported last night on both coasts of Florida. Word came from St. Augustine to-day that three dead had been found in the wreck of an unknown four-masted schooner near Detray.

The missing total at least half a hundred, including the crew of nine on the Texas Oil Company's barge Dallas, which broke adrift from her tow in a 100-mile blow on Tuesday.

KEY WEST, by way of Havana, Oct. 21.—The United States cutter Forward returned here to-day, bringing the rest of the passengers from the French transatlantic steamer Louisiane, which went ashore on Sombrero Reef in the hurricane of Monday. About half of the 547 passengers reached here yesterday.

The Captain of the Louisiane reports that it will be impossible to save his ship until the cargo has been removed. He is still awaiting orders from the owners.

The Captain of the Norwegian steamer Fos, which is fast in the quicksand at Marquesas, has arrived at Tortugas Island, and reports that his vessel is in good condition.

The American steamer Herman Frasche, which was ashore off Alligator Light, has been floated, and is being towed into port by a tug. The schooner Hanson L. Beecher is reported waterlogged and dismasted off Cape San Antonio, Cuba. The Captain and crew refuse assistance.

Relief for Cuban Storm Sufferers.

HAVANA, Oct. 21.—Brief reports received to-day from various sections of the Province of Pinar del Rio show no diminution in the estimates of the damage done by the recent storm. The loss of life, however, is confined mainly to scattered cases of drowning. Destitution in the provinces is great, but the Government is making every effort to afford relief to the needy.

WILL DESTROY A PICTURE.

Miss Stedman Didn't Wish "Pinky's" Portrait to Go to Any One.

Nina M. Stedman, who died on Oct. 1 at Mount Kisco, included this in her will, made on Dec. 23, 1907, and filed yesterday for probate:

> I direct my executors as soon as they have qualified to destroy the portrait of my sister "Pinky," now deceased, as I do not wish it in the possession of anyone else.

Her property, described in the petition as consisting of more than $10,000 real property and more than $10,000 personalty, is divided in equal shares between Mabel and Eleanor Johnson of Hartford, Conn. The will does not mention Emma M. Raymond of the Hotel Ansonia, sister of the testatrix.

FINDS NONE TO BLAME FOR LOSS OF SAILORS

Board Inquiring Into Swamping of Warship's Launch Lays It to "All Circumstances."

ENSIGN CHEVALIER NOT NAMED

This Construed as Exoneration for Young Officer, Who Had Been Praised for Bravery.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 21.—The findings of the board of inquiry which investigated the swamping of a barge from the battleship New Hampshire in the Hudson River, off New York, on Sept. 30, have been approved by Acting Secretary of the Navy Nicholson and were made public by the Navy Department to-day. The findings do not mention Ensign Chevalier, who was in command of the landing party, and this is taken to mean that the board exonerates the young officer whose heroic efforts were credited that night with saving the lives of many of his men.

The swamping of the barge, which was being towed from the wharf back to the battleship after dark, resulted in the drowning of more than twenty-five men, and the board of inquiry went with care into the testimony of all of the survivors. Though there is some indirect criticism of arrangements that made the disaster possible, the board specifically refuses to lay the blame against any individual.

"It seems to the board," the report says, "that all extraordinary circumstances must have conspired fatally to transform an ordinary routine matter into a calamity."

At the time of the accident comment was made on the possible overloading of the barge and of the possibility of its being towed so fast through the rough water that its bow was dragged beneath the surface. The report, touching on both these points, finds that neither one alone nor both together would have been sufficient to have caused swamping. The barge was heavily laden, the board admits, but the load did not exceed the regulation burden for boats at the command "Abandon ship!"

The one definite criticism made by the board involves the enlisted men, the report stating that had they obeyed orders and sat down, instead of remaining standing or moving aft to avoid the spray, the accident would probably not have occurred.

HUPPUCH DENIES ROOSEVELT CHARGE

Statement That Dix Is In a Trust Evidence of His Disregard of Facts, State Chairman Says.

A PLEA TO NEGRO VOTERS

Democratic Circular Asks Them to "Remember Brownsville"—Murphy Visits State Headquarters.

Col. Roosevelt's charge that John A. Dix, the Democratic nominee for Governor, is connected with the Wall Paper Trust was denied yesterday at Democratic State Headquarters. The denial was forwarded to this city by Winfield A. Huppuch, Chairman of the Democratic State Committee, from his home in Hudson Falls, N. Y. Mr. Huppuch says that Mr. Roosevelt's statement is simply continued evidence of the ex-President's disregard for facts.

The State Chairman went to his up-State home to register, and he did not read Mr. Roosevelt's speech containing the charges against Mr. Dix until he arrived there. Yesterday he called William S. Rodie, Chairman of the Democratic Executive Committee of the State Committee, on the long-distance telephone and dictated this:

> This charge of Mr. Roosevelt's is entirely and absolutely without foundation. The Standard Wall Paper Company is not connected directly or indirectly with any other wall paper company, or with any Wall Paper Trust or combination in any manner, shape, or form. This statement is only continued evidence of Mr. Roosevelt's reckless disregard of facts, and shows again how badly rattled he is at the situation in which he finds himself and his candidate.

Mr. Dix did not make any statement himself. He left the city yesterday at noon for his home in Thomson. Before he left, it had been definitely decided that he was to make his only New York City speech on the night of Wednesday, Nov. 2, at Carnegie Hall, under the auspices of the Independent Business Men's League, of which Herman Ridder is President.

In a pamphlet, which he issued yesterday, entitled "John A. Dix in the Wall Paper Combination Which Was Found Guilty by the United States Supreme Court," Albert H. Walker, a lawyer with an office in the Park Row Building, attempted to set forth Mr. Dix's connection with the Wall Paper Trust, and asserts that under Section 1 of the Sherman law, if it could now be enforced against Mr. Dix, he would be subject to punishment by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by a fine not exceeding $5,000.

Mr. Rodie, in the absence of Chairman Huppuch yesterday, gave out this statement:

"The Seam Fitters' and Color Mixers' Union which is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor in Northern New York, comprising the men in the Standard Wall Paper Mills in which Mr. Dix is interested, at Hudson Falls and Schuylerville, and also the Imperial Wall Paper Company at Glens Falls, have unanimously indorsed the candidacy of Mr. Dix. The New York and Brooklyn locals of the same organization have also indorsed the candidacy of Mr. Dix."

Charles F. Murphy called at Democratic State headquarters yesterday and had a long conference with the leaders there. When he left Mr. Rodie said he had received reports during the day from many up-State counties.
now than it has ever done," said Mr. Rodie. "The reports are more optimistic every day. The situation never looked brighter."

It was also given out at the Democratic Headquarters that the State Organization, United Colored Democracy, has begun an active campaign for Mr. Dix and the whole Democratic ticket. The 40,000 colored voters of the State, it is said, are to receive a series of leaflets asking them to "remember Brownsville" and criticising Roosevelt's attitude toward the colored race.

Mayor Gaynor was asked yesterday if he intended giving out a letter advocating the election of Mr. Dix. The Mayor replied that he had already given out the letter and that it would be read at a Democratic mass meeting in Buffalo next week. The Mayor said he thought Mr. Dix was an able and intelligent man and capable of giving the people of the State a satisfactory business administration.

STIMSON DEFENDS EXPENSES

State Under Republicans More Economical Than City Under Democrats.

Special to The New York Times.

GENEVA, N. Y., Oct. 21.—With his campaigning reinforced by Walter M. Chandler of New York City and by the Temple Quartet of Canandaigua, Henry L. Stimson came leisurely through Ontario County to-day. Both he and Job Hedges need rest for their voices. The candidate is not a little embarrassed for new points to make. Mr. Dix will not say anything that can be used as an argument, and ex-Judge Parker's attacks do not seem to discompose him for long. And when the "King Roosevelt" idea is broached before these up-State audiences, they don't get indignant—they either applaud enthusiastically or laugh. The candidate has been telling them all day that no sane person could possibly think for a moment that Rooseveltism is a real issue. He calls that the silly work of a "Democratic mischiefmaker."

Speaking here to-night in Smith's Opera House, Mr. Stimson referred to ex-Judge Parker's reported statement that he would not answer the charge of Republican extravagance under the administration of Gov. Hughes.

"I notice," he said, "that that spokesman, whom our opponents have put out in the absence of Mr. Dix himself, took me to task the other day because I did not take up this main issue of the campaign. I am afraid the Judge has not been reading my speeches. At practically every place where I have spoken I have taken up that issue, but before you can take up the question you must find out what the charge is. Before you meet a case in court you are entitled to know the complaint, and although I have been asking now for two weeks what the specifications of this charge were, not even Judge Parker himself has furnished me with any of them.

"They say that the budget of the State has increased. It undoubtedly has. But the efficiency of the State Government has also increased, and efficiency costs money. When I have asked my opponents which of the different items of increase they would choose to have us take out I have had no answer."

Mr. Stimson declared that while the budget of New York State, chiefly by Republicans, had been increased 66 per cent. in the last twelve years, the budget of New York City, chiefly in the hands of Democrats, had increased 110 per cent. in the same time. The State government under Gov. Hughes had paid for permanent improvements out of current income, Mr. Stimson said, while the citizens of New York City were paying interest on bonds issued to pay for music in the parks, the last notes of which died five years ago; for soap, and for fireworks to celebrate the opening of a new bridge.

The candidate continued to ask his opponents whether the briefly worded plank in the Democratic platform against sumptuary legislation was put there to back up a weak Governor who might want to favor legislation re-establishing race-track gambling in this State. He wanted some Democrat to say what the plank did mean.

The meeting here to-night was well attended. While Mr. Chanler, the first orator on the programme, was speaking the fire bell rang, and there was a stampede from the Opera House, led by the volunteers.

The first meeting of the day, at Canandaigua, was in Davidson's Theatre. It was not half filled—perhaps 400 people being present. It was there that the Temple Quartet added their strength to the campaigning force. One of their songs says that:

With Stimson in command,
And our Teddy close at hand,
We'll drive the Tammany Tiger from his lair.

Gibson's Hall at Phelps was nearly filled with 200 people, who sat almost without a moment's applause through Mr. Stimson's speech, most of which covered familiar points.

The candidate leaves Geneva in the morning for Buffalo, making several stops en route, and will be in Buffalo from Saturday until Monday morning.

Socialist Candidate Off on a Tour.

Charles Edward Russell, Gubernatorial candidate of the Socialist Party, will set ou this morning on his last stumping tour of the State. Mr. Russell's itinerary includes stops at all the principal cities of the State. He will be the principal speaker at meetings to be held in Rochester on Sunday afternoon and evening, leaving immediately after the night session for Lockport. Mr. Russell will not return to this city until Nov. 4th. He will speak every evening until the eve of election in various sections of this city.

Labor Party Indorses Democrats.

An appeal was issued yesterday by the General Committee of the Federated Labor Party, which on Thursday evening at a general convention, indorsed the full Democratic State ticket, to the members of the labor unions to vote the Democratic ticket. The appeal says that the position taken by the Democratic Party on matters of vital importance to the workers indicates that labor has most to expect from that party.

YOUNG CONTRADICTS PRENTICE FORECAST

Ex-President of Republican Club Says Party Will Lose Heavily in the State.

STATE CHAIRMAN CONFIDENT

Vote for Stimson Will Be Bigger Than That for Hughes, He Declares After a Tour of the State.

The election of Henry L. Stimson, Republican candidate for Governor, was confidently predicted yesterday by Chairman Ezra P. Prentice of the Republican State Committee. Mr. Prentice admitted that it was somewhat early to make forecasts, but he said he felt justified in his confidence by what he had learned on a two days' journey up State, from which he had just returned, and in the course of which he had talked to most of the Republican State Committeemen and many local leaders.

While Mr. Prentice gave out this forecast at Republican headquarters in this city, Charles H. Young, ex-President of the Republican Club, who two weeks ago resigned from that organization after declaring that he could not vote the Republican ticket this Fall on account of the boost it would give Col. Theodore Roosevelt, prophesied heavy Republican defections from Mr. Stimson, and declared that he could back up his statement with documentary evidence.

"Why," said Mr. Young, "after I came out openly in opposition to Col. Roosevelt's candidate I have received 1,940 letters from up-State Republicans of influence who declared they were going to vote and work for the election of John A. Dix. Some of those who have written me are willing to have me quote them as out against the candidates of their party. Others are not, because they do not desire to be annoyed by heelers of the organization seeking to bring them back into line."

Mr. Young said that practically every county in the State was represented on his list. The letters, Mr. Young said, indicated that in the County of Nassau, where Col. Roosevelt lives, the defection would be heavier in proportion to the number of registered voters than in any other county of the State. Mr. Young decided yesterday to give some of the names for publication. Here they are:

ALBANY.—Arthur D. Mills, Marcus T. Hun, and J. Fenimore Cooper. In all Mr. Young received fourteen letters from malcontents, who are enrolled Republican voters of Albany County.

CAYUGA.—Dr. James Stewart of Auburn. Ten letters were received from Cayuga Republicans, who declared they would vote and work for Dix.

COLUMBIA.—C. A. Van Deusen.

FULTON.—Charles L. Porter of Gloversville.

JEFFERSON.—W. O. Balls, paper manufacturer of Watertown.

RICHMOND.—Andrew Powell and Frank H. Walker of Rosebank and James J. Winants of Rossville.

SARATOGA.—Frank Gilbert, paper manufacturer, Waterford.

WESTCHESTER.—Arthur E. Walradt, lawyer, and Dr. Herbert Cady.

In Oneida County, Mr. Young said, Chairman Prentice has not succeeded in patching up the factional differences. Yesterday Mr. Young said he received a letter from W. H. Roberts, one of the leading hardware men in Utica, in which he said:

> For the first time in my life I expect to vote the Democratic ticket almost straight. I have heard Dix spoken of very highly and I certainly have no use for Col. Roosevelt. I know a great great, many Republicans in this section, among business men and manufacturers especially, who are going to vote the straight Democratic ticket, though they are Republicans. Whether they are willing to declare publicly their purpose remains to be seen.

Chairman Prentice, in his trip up-State, visited Albany, Troy, Utica, Syracuse, Rochester, and Buffalo.

"Conditions in every place I visited are encouraging and satisfactory," said Mr. Prentice. "I have discovered no factional differences of sufficient importance to endanger the success of the ticket. In Albany everything is in good shape. I want to deny most emphatically the report that I went there to ask Mr. Barnes to reconsider his resignation as a member of the Republican State Committee.

"In Utica the factions in the Republican organization have buried their differences under an agreement based on mutual concessions. I had a very pleasand talk with Vice President Sherman while in Utica.

"In Syracuse conditions are better than they were two years ago, and Stimson will get a bigger vote in Onondaga than Hughes did. In Rochester the outlook is glorious. I had luncheon there with George W. Aldridge and the local candidates, who are a fine lot. I can assure you there is mighty little anti-Roosevelt feeling there.

"What anti-Roosevelt feeling there is is confined to the big cities. The farmers, according to the reports that reach me, are enthusiastic for Roosevelt and for Stimson. Everywhere their utterances on the stump have made a deep impression. Even the Democrats are beginning to fear Tammany control of their party and of the State administration.

"The inconsistency and insincerity of Dix's attitude on the tariff question has weakened him with all right-minded people up-State. Oh, Dix is just beginning to wake up to what he is up against. As for me, I am tickled to death. I would have been satisfied if we could have done only as well as we did two years ago, but now I know that we are going to do a great deal better.

"The siren song from Wall Street is luring the Democrats to destruction. They have forgotten there are more bricklayers than bankers in the State of New York."

It was announced at the headquarters of the State Committee last night that Col. Roosevelt would make, on Oct. 29, another trip through Brooklyn. Senator Elihu Root will make a speech in this city some time next week. The hall has not yet been selected. Senator Chauncey M. Depew and ex-Police Commissioner Bingham have volunteered their services on the stump.

WILSON FAVORS RATE MAKING

Explains His Stand on the New Jersey Utilities Commission.

Woodrow Wilson, in a letter to Howard Marshall, President of the Commuters' League of New Jersey, declares that he "favors a statute giving the Public Utility Commission the power, upon complaint or upon its own motion to fix just and reasonable rates which will give a fair return on the value of the property devoted to public service, which is outlined by the decisions of the courts, that being the real and the just constitutional basis for such rate making." He also says he "favors an appropriation for the purpose of making a valuation of all the physical property of public utility companies devoted to the public service."

The letter was a reply to a communication sent to Dr. Wilson asking a definite expression of his views on the character of rate-making power, for which the league is contending.

LITTLETON TELLS OF NEW NATIONALISM

In Roosevelt's Own District He Submits a Cold Criticism of the Colonel's Policies.

ON A WHIRLWIND CAMPAIGN

Democrats Believe He Has a Good Chance to Beat Cocks, the Colonel's Friend, for Congress.

Special to The New York Times.

BABYLON, L. I., Oct. 21.—Martin W. Littleton, the Democratic candidate for the seat in Congress from the First New York District, now held by Col. Roosevelt's friend, William W. Cocks, continued his whirlwind campaign here to-night when he addressed a big Democratic mass meeting in Alhambra Hall. Mr. Littleton has a Republican majority of about 6,000 votes to overcome in order to beat Cocks, but the Democrats believe that he has a fine chance to do it, and for that reason they are whooping pu things as never before in this old Long Island district.

Mr. Littleton is covering the district from end to end, and by election day, if his voice holds out, there won't be a group of voters in the whole district that will not have had a chance to hear him. Hundreds of the most prominent citizens of Long Island have rallied to his support, even women of social distinction joining in the fight for him.

In Babylon to-night Mr. Littleton again made Col. Roosevelt's much advertised "New Nationalism" the keynote of his speech. He emphasized the effect that new Nationalism would have upon the personal and property rights of the individual citizen.

"We have seen the effect," said Mr. Littleton, "that 'New Nationalism' would have upon the structure of the Government as proposed by Mr. Roosevelt, and we have seen also the effect, once this structural change had taken place, which 'New Nationalism' would have upon the personal and property rights of the individual. In other words, we have seen the individual citizen suddenly changed from a citizen of the State to a citizen of the Nation, with all his property rights and economical activities subjected to the caprice of a National Government.

"This has been proposed, and if it is done, will be done because the States have become impotent to deal with individual and property rights. The addition of these powers to the National Government, the extension of existing departments, and the creation of new ones will be required in order to fully exercise these powers. The entire scheme of our Federal judicial system will have to be overhauled, and the National Government will have to descend from its distinctive and lofty position as a political sovereignty to the circumstantial and particular details of a domestic and social sovereignty."

Mr. Littleton then talked of the amount of increase in the National expenditure that would be necessary to maintain the new and highly centralized form of Government contemplated by "New Nationalism."

"If it costs one thousand million dollars annually," added Mr. Littleton, "to pay the expense of conducting our National Government as at present organized and run, it becomes pertinent to inquire what will it cost if 'New Nationalism' with its extended departments, its increased jurisdiction, its added responsibility, and its numberless officials has been finally established. If the National Government takes upon itself the duty of doing that which constitutionally and logically the States should do, and were designed to do, what will be the increased cost on the part of the National Government arising from the full discharge of these assumed and additional burdens?"

Mr. Littleton then pointed to the great increase in the number of offices created in the last two years and the corresponding increase in the Government's salary lists.

"If, with the limited powers of the National Government, conducted wholly as a political sovereignty, in this short time," he added, "it has been found necessary to establish something over 25,000 new offices, the aggregate amount of whose salaries and increases is over $39,000,000, what can be expected in the way of increases when the National Government has been turned from a Government of limited powers into 'New Nationalism,' or one of unlimited powers?"

After paying his respects to the Payne-Aldrich Tariff act, passed by the last Congress, Mr. Littleton touched on the waste of the National money.

"If a Democratic Congress should be returned in November," he said, "and I should be one of the number I propose that a resolution be introduced for the appointment of an extraordinary committee on waste, whose business under the resolution it will be to employ the most expert talent available and to sit from day to day until it has gone into the very vitals of every department of the National Government, an unrelenting probe, resolutely endeavoring to find the reason for the expenditure of one thousand million dollars annually for the conduct of the Government; to overhaul the moribund bureaus; to cut out the deadwood of the wasteful departments; to stop the embezzlement of time; to curtail unnecessary salaries; to reduce the unnecessary officials, to the end that the already bewildering cost of our National Government shall be arrested and reduced."

MANY REGISTRATION FRAUDS

J. H. Esser to Prosecute Westchester Violations, Regardless of Who Is Hit.

Attorney J. Henry Esser of Mount Vernon, has been appointed by Attorney General O'Malley a Special Deputy Attorney General, to conduct the investigation now under way in the matter of the alleged illegal registration of about 500 names of voters in the northern towns of Westchester County. The Grand Jury examined witnesses yesterday, and later adjourned until Monday.

Fully 80 per cent. of the names registered in Yorktown, North Castle, Greenburgh, and Mount Pleasant, are questioned. Detectives are working among the labor camps of the New York watershed, and an inspection of the men's time cards, which show their time of residence in the county, is being made.

Special Deputy Esser made the following statement as to the manner in which the prosecution of violators of the law will be conducted:

"Everything in the hands of District Attorney Winslow has been turned over to me. So far the complaints are confined to the men working on the New York water project. Every violation will be prosecuted regardless of what political party or person is hit. This is the first, last, and only statement I shall make."

They shall conform to strict rules of hygiene—

They shall be of the best material, through and through—

They shall cover no deceit, for they shall be backed by Gimbels guarantee for wear.

At your service is a shoe stock containing all good qualities, lines and styles, in every size and width and without the slightest item missing to make Gimbels a complete shoe store.

STIMSON AND EFFICIENCY

F. W. Whitridge Urges Westchester Voters to Support Ticket.

LETTER TO SUTHERLAND

Reviews Conditions and Points to Rejuvenated Party for the Remedy.

F. W. Whitridge, receiver of the Third Avenue Railroad Company, in an open letter to Leslie Sutherland, of Yonkers, gave a calm review of the political situation, with his reasons for advocating the election of Mr. Stimson and the Republican ticket generally.

The writer's purpose, he explained, was to exhort "so-called Republicans skulking in the byways of Westchester County to come out of the bushes and vote for Stimson and efficiency." Mr. Whitridge predicted that if they did not they would "look and feel extraordinarily silly after election."

The letter follows:

New York, October 16, 1910.

"Dear Mr. Sutherland: Since our conversation about the election the other day Mr. Dix has announced that overshadowing all other questions, 'and of most vital importance to the people, is the menace offered to the various institutions of the country' by Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, and Mr. Dix is further of the opinion that if he is not curbed 'all of the sacrifices made by the founders of the Republic and all the blood shed for its preservation shall have been in vain, and we shall see in the time of profound peace a dangerous disturber bringing about the destruction of a free people against whom all forces of the world in arms might have been hurled in vain.'

"This sounds pretty serious, and when a respectable man—even though he is a political candidate—can so express himself, it behooves every good citizen to carefully consider his position. My faith in American institutions and the danger to them from Mr. Roosevelt or any other individual is a good deal more robust than that of Mr. Dix, and to me he appears to be talking pure twaddle. The notion that any individual can overturn institutions and destroy a people, free or otherwise, I had supposed was as dead as George III., and when a man in his speeches pretends to believe that, even if Mr. Roosevelt were a dishonest man, which he is not, and desired to Mexicanize the United States or to play the part of the good Haroun al Raschid, it would be possible for him to do it, I feel sure that in his heart he must know he is talking rubbish.

Corruption and Extravagance.

"If American institutions are in danger, it is from the prevalence of corruption and extravagance, from demagogic legislation and from inefficient and stupid administration of the law. To my mind, conditions are better than they have ever been. It is past question that during the last decade there has been in politics, and especially in large business, an ethical revival, and it is the fact that Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, more than any one person, has contributed to that awakening. He is vulnerable to criticism, for he sometimes voices the indiscriminate popular indignation with wrongdoing and the popular impatience with legal methods, and he has lately made use of an adjective in connection with the Supreme Court which I doubt not he regrets as much as anybody. I think, however, I can find you, in the speeches of Abraham Lincoln at the time of the Dred Scott case much stronger language about that great tribunal than Mr. Roosevelt has ever used, and I doubt if even those people who now discuss Mr. Roosevelt more hysterically and violently than he has ever discussed anything would deny that, on the whole, he has deserved well of his country.

"This is, however, the year 1910; it is not the year 1912. We have not now to consider a choice of delegates to a Presidential Convention, still less is this a Presidential election. If it were, Mr. Taft—not Mr. Roosevelt—is the candidate, and I believe it the duty of every man to do his utmost to hold up the hands of that loyal soul in his endeavors to fulfil the pledges of his party and to continue his long career of faithful performance of duty.

Stimson and Dix Compared.

"The question before us to-day is the election of a Governor of the State of New York. The choice is between Mr. Stimson, who has a proved career as an efficient, high-minded public servant, and Mr. Dix, who is, I believe, quite erroneously supposed to be the grand-nephew of General Dix, who stirred our youthful pulses with the order, 'If any man attempts to haul down the American flag, shoot him on the spot.' Some legend of that order was perhaps floating through his mind when the letter of acceptance was written, but, judging from his style, I doubt if he would have the pluck to direct such an order against the dwellers in the robbers' cave in Fourteenth Street. Ordinarily there would not and ought not to be much doubt of Mr. Stimson's election.

"The conditions in New York are, however, just now not normal. In the first place, the age-long cry for 'Peace! Peace!' when there is no peace, is louder and more earnest than usual. The people feel that they have been harassed, denounced and exhorted more than they can stand, and there is good reason for this. The frightful extravagance of government has necessitated new taxes of an inquisitorial character, and undigested and slovenly legislation administered without common sense by 'jacks in office' has wearied us to exasperation.

Causes of Unrest.

"It would be easy to give numerous instances which explain that state of mind, nearly all of them occurring in the course of the administration of the law—and I have one case before me now in which the Interstate Commission has threatened to indict the Directors of a small railroad if they do not stop something they are now doing, and the Railroad Commission of the State in which the railroad is situated has threatened to indict the Directors if they do not continue to do it!

"Much of all this, however, like the increased cost of living, is world-wide. Inquisitorial taxation and governmental regulation are increasing all over the United States and everywhere else. The bureaucracy, or Civil Service, especially in England, is bending under its increased burdens, although abroad they have trained officials to depend upon, while here we do their work with petty politicians or wild doctrinaires, and, as I view it, the only way to the peace for which we cry is not by stopping all the wheels, and bringing about a deadlock, but by efficiency—much greater efficiency—in administration, for nobody now proposes to get rest and quiet by cutting down expenses to the standard of ten years ago or by abandoning the new legislation. It is also true that the lavish vehemence of Mr. Roosevelt leads many to suppose that he thinks Wall Street is full of corporations like the Sugar Trust, and that there are special privileged interests which must be probed and curbed. I know something about Wall Street, and I believe the Sugar Trust to be absolutely unique. Nowhere was the revelation of its wickedness received with more amazement than in Wall Street, and nowhere has Mr. Roosevelt's ethical revival been more efficacious and permanent than in that much-abused neighborhood. All the corporations I know of are now leading as blameless lives as the ladies who smuggled so gayly before Mr. Loeb became Collector, and as for special privileged interests, the only ones I know of are the newspaper editors and certain officials I could specify, who bring the law into contempt every other day, and no man says them nay.

Course of Heroic Healing.

"In the second place, the Republican Party in New York, which has been suffering from the offensive unworldliness of Governor Hughes and from the squalid and sickening corruption uncovered at Albany, has been temporarily weakened by a course of heroic healing. The party machine, which showed wretched cowardice before Mr. Hughes, although it has probably been charged with more than its share of corruption, was discredited, and if there was to be any hope of success that machine had to be changed or smashed. Thanks to Mr. Roosevelt, almost alone, that has been done, and the doing of it was a fine, gallant performance on his part. The house of the Republican Party in this State has now been cleaned and is in order. It is justly entitled to the support of every man who ever called himself a Republican, and to the support of every man of whatever creed who really desires good government, and it is the first time in years when that could be said.

"Now, what about the opposition? For months a considerable number of respectable gentlemen have been holding conferences and forming committes and drafting forms of platforms, all looking forward to the rehabilitation of the Democratic Party and to putting it in fighting trim. All this appeared very promising, and it looked for a while as if we were to have a strong, intelligent opposition party; but when the Democratic Convention met the intellectuals had disappeared, and Tammany Hall, with Mr. Murphy at the head of it, was in full control. In the case of the Republican Party there was a good, rattling fight, and the best man won; in the case of the Democratic Party there was no fight at all, and the party succumbed without a struggle to the worst men in its ranks and the worst set of men in American politics.

Tammany Unmitigated Evil.

"Denunciations of Tammany are rather threadbare, but so are all denunciations of evil, and from the time of Isaiah Rynders and Fernando Wood, at least, Tammany Hall has been an unmitigated evil. At any time during these last sixty years every friend of honest government could point at it and exclaim: 'There is the enemy!' No Democratic Roosevelt has appeared to smash it, and for a generation no Tilden has appeared to undermine it. For a long time it kept itself in the background, except in the City of New York, which it controlled absolutely, save when once in a decade it became so outrageous as to defeat itself, but latterly it has become ambitious and played a part in State, and even National, politics. Its leaders may be smart enough to bring their intellectuals to heel, but they are not intelligent enough to know that they themselves are not respectable, and this year, although Mr. Murphy consented 'to pander to the better element' by nominating Mr. Dix, it is plain enough that a vote for that gentleman is a vote for Tammany Hall, triumphant and unashamed. 'The Times' of this morning reproaches Mr. Roosevelt with having nothing more to say than abuse of Tammany, but what has become of the traditions of 'The Times' office that it should think anything else necessary, and notwithstanding Tammany 'The Times' urges the election of Mr. Dix.

Why Vote for Dix?

"Now, why should anybody vote for Mr. Dix? If a man is a regularly enlisted member of the Democratic Party, that is a reason. If he is not, but is one of the free men to whom I appeal, let him calmly consider the position and endeavor to formulate his reasons or his excuses for so doing. There are some such men who are honestly afraid of Mr. Roosevelt, and who think he is a dangerous person. Mr. Dix has expressed their views with candor, but I challenge any one of these gentlemen to take a cold bath and after ten minutes' reflection in the morning, say on his honor that Mr. Dix's expressions on this subject are not, as I have called them, pure twaddle. If they are not, and there is any sober truth in those expressions, American institutions are a mere house of cards, have no roots in the hearts or brains of the people and can be demolished by a sound, like the walls of Jericho. It is inconceivable to me that anybody can really entertain any such opinions.

Economy from Tammany?

"There are other free men who think as I do that the expense of government has increased too rapidly and unnecessarily, and that but for this our taxes would be lighter and of a less harassing character, and therefore they wish to turn out the party in power. All politicians, however, favor the inheritance taxes and the corporation taxes and seem to be united in favor of an income tax. That tax is far more odious than a tariff, and we bid fair to have them both unless there is a great curtailment of government expenses. Can any one in his senses expect that from a Tammany administration? To me a conjunction of 'economy' with Tammany is unthinkable.

"Then again there are a few persons who hope that some of the annoying legislation of recent years may be repealed by a Democratic administration, but the Democratic Party does not even promise it, and it is the fact that most of the legislation of that character was advocated by Democrats before it was adopted by Republicans. All these excuses for a vote for Mr. Dix are to my mind unreasonable. The fear of Mr. Roosevelt, if he were a candidate, which he is not, is foolish, and the hope of doing away with legislation which has been brought about by the growth and complexities of modern society is futile until there is complete change in the minds of the whole people. If that change ever comes it will certainly not be before this election.

How to Deal with Discontent.

"We have, therefore, to take the situation as it is. Recognizing frankly the just foundation for much of our present discontent, we have to consider how to deal with it. We cannot turn back the hands on the clock, but hasty legislation may be improved by amendment, doubtful laws may be construed, the whims and caprices of ardent officials may be restrained. To me it is plain that a strong, fearless, efficient Executive can accomplish much in these directions, and above all he can infuse the whole State administration with that 'saving common sense' which a French publicist has said is the quality which has enabled 'Anglosaxiana' to stand 'contra mundum.' The choice of such an Executive is the best possible, and certainly the only available, remedy for our present conditions; nothing can be accomplished by peevishly kicking over the traces, by gratifying personal pique or yielding to childish fears. Where are we to find such an Executive? Surely not in the author of Mr. Dix's letter of acceptance.

Stimson's Qualifications.

"The choice is between the Republican Party and Henry L. Stimson and the Democratic Party and John A. Dix. On the one hand we have a senile party clinging to its youthful vices and a respectable candidate about whom we know nothing, except that he has lately uttered some dreadful nonsense, and, like most owners of infant industries, wanted a little more tariff for his protection. On the other side we have a rejuvenated party and an equally respectable candidate, who has proved his efficiency. As a lawyer he has had experience of large affairs and a knowledge of large business; as the United States District Attorney he has done some difficult things and made no mistakes in doing them. He is said to be cold blooded. If that is true, so much the better, for he will not be so easily deceived, and he will not try to humbug the people. I know he is a clear-headed, unostentatious, courageous and intelligent man. As Governor of the State of New York he will by virtue of these qualities and by habit and experience be an efficient administrator of the law. As I look at it, the grand desideratum all over this country to-day is efficient administration. We have more laws than we know what to do with. What we need is to apply them with firmness and good common sense. That Mr. Stimson will do, and in him alone we shall find efficiency.

"I have written you at this length because I understand there are a good many so-called Republicans skulking in the byways of Westchester. They are of the same kidney as the White Boys and others who infested that neighborhood during the Revolution, and, as I believe your people now think I tell the truth, I venture to exhort them to come out of the bushes and vote for Stimson and efficiency, and if they do not I further venture to say to them that they will look and feel extraordinarily silly after the election.

"Yours very truly,

"F. W. WHITRIDGE.

ROOSEVELT WILLING TO FIGHT ON TARIFF

Tells Boston Throng the Party Is Now United on the Way to Revise It.

INDORSES SENATOR LODGE

Thousands Cheer Him, While Other Thousands Are Unable to Get Into Great Hall.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Oct. 21.—Boston gave Col. Roosevelt to-night one of the greatest receptions he has had since his return from Europe. It was a record crowd that greeted him in the new Arena Building. It cheered him for two and a half minutes when he came into the building, and again for an equal time when he was introduced to speak. As he delivered his arguments in behalf of Republicanism he was interrupted again and again with the real old-fashioned cheers that campaigns in New York have been accustomed to evoke before this year. It was like the reception in Kansas.

The Arena, which was used for the first time to-night, and is not in fact entirely completed as yet, will seat something more than 8,000 people. Every seat was occupied, and there were several thousands who could not get inside. For an hour after the opening of the meeting a great crowd stood around, and several hundred waited in the cold to the end just to gape once more at Col. Roosevelt as he came out.

Col. Roosevelt gave to Senator Lodge an unqualified indorsement for re-election, declaring that the Senator had been the "Consistent friend of real progressive legislation" and that to defeat him "would be a calamity." He indorsed the Massachusetts platform declaration on the tariff and asserted that there was no longer any difference of opinion in the Republican Party as to the principle of protection—meaning the Taft measure of the differential between domestic and foreign costs of production—and that there would soon be no difference as to the method of applying that principle through the medium of a "permanent, independent expert" tariff commission.

It had been advertised that Col. Roosevelt was coming here to speak in behalf of Senator Lodge. Up to three weeks ago there had been a campaign against him that led many observers to think that Mr. Lodge might be defeated. The wrangle of the Democrats, however, so affected their prospects that Mr. Lodge's friends felt that all necessity for outside assistance is ended. Still Senator Lodge and other leaders were anxious to have Col. Roosevelt come for the general effect his visit would have.

He came over from New York this morning, and was met at the station by Senator Lodge and taken to the house of Dr. H. S. Bigelow, the Senator's brother-in-law, on Beacon Street. The meeting this evening was under the auspices of the Republican Club of Massachusetts.

There was some doubt as to just what Col. Roosevelt would say about the tariff, but no doubt was left at the Arena as to where the Republicans of Massachusetts stood on the Payne-Aldrich bill. Scattered all over were dark-blue postal cards bearing an extended legend in stout defense of the law. With this as a guide it was no surprise when the speaking began to have ex-Gov. Bates deliver an old-fashioned Republican plea for protection. That good, old-time Massachusetts tariff doctrine evoken its proper meed of cheers from the crowd, and ex-Gov. Bates went on to suggest that it might be necessary to do something more about the tariff before long.

"The tariff has its imperfections," he said, "but it stands between the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and dire disaster."

During this sort of talk Col. Roosevelt sat on the platform behind the speaker, wearing the look on his face that regularly appears when he is being introduced as the "Greatest Citizen of the World."

A group of distinguished citizens of the protection-saved Commonwealth were with him, including Gov. Draper, Senators Lodge and Crane, and Representatives Lawrence, Roberts, and Butler Ames. Mr. Bates mentioned Gov. Draper and the latter got hearty cheers. When he mentioned President Taft the crowd whooped it up well.

When Bates introduced Senator Lodge there was tremendous cheering, which continued for more than a minute. The Senator made a short speech of welcome to Col. Roosevelt, and nothing better shows the temper of the crowd toward the Colonel than the cheers which broke up the speech. He said:

"We welcome you as a great American citizen. We welcome you as a soldier of the Republic, as one who has done high service in the great office of President. We believe that in that office you insured it forever that men and not money are to rule in the United States, and thereby strengthened the confidence of the people in their Government. We see in you one who is no respector of persons, but who has fought always for the welfare of the whole people uninfluenced by the interest of popularity and undaunted by threats of loss of votes."

Ex-Gov. Bates finally made the real introductory speech, getting wild cheers for his declaration that Col. Roosevelt "when he finds the old Republican policy becoming a little insipid grafts on the old tree such new policies as are needed."

When the Coloned arose the crowd let itself loose. After the demonstration he plunged almost at once into the tariff part of what he had to say.

"The opponent of Gov. Draper has said that the tariff is an issue in this campaign," said the Colonel. "I hope it is, and all I ask is that the voters think over the positions of the two parties on this subject and compare the men who make the promises one with the other.

"In the first place I want to make clear something on which there seems to be some obscurity in the public mind. On the Republican side there is no difference whatever as to the principle to be observed in handling the tariff. In every State in the Union the Republicans are a unit on the principle expounded two years ago in the Republican National platform, which declares for such measure of protection as will equalize the cost of production at home and abroad.

"All through the Union that is the doctrine of the Republican Party. The difference has merely been as to the method of achieving the common purpose, and more and more we are coming into complete agreement as to the method. Our opponents have no such harmony of purpose."

Col. Roosevelt declared that he did not think the Democrats expressed themselves with sincerity on the tariff. He remarked that many of them declared for a tariff for revenue only, although they knew they would never attempt to realize that idea if they ever secured the power.

"They know they would build a protective tariff," he declared, "only the protection would be distributed, not as a matter of principle, but as a matter of privilege and favor. We agree on the principle and soon will agree on the method to be followed in carrying out that principle. Your tariff plank expresses admirably what that method ought to be." [Cheers.]

Col. Roosevelt read the tariff plank of the Massachusetts plan, which declares for the creation of a permanent, independent expert tariff commission, "to discover and report the facts as to cost of production and other tariff matters to Congress for action and for revision, schedule by schedule."

He said he wanted especially to emphasize the declaration for a "permanent, independent, and expert" commission. He declared that President Taft had initiated the policy to which the party and the country would eventually come. The mention of the President got a round of hearty cheers. Then he spoke of the creation of the tariff board and of the construction of the law by the President so as to give it the powers it is now exercising.

"In these two features of prime importance," Col. Roosevelt continued, "President Taft has indicated the way along which the Republican Party is going to move." There were more cheers and applause. "That represents the only practical way to remove the objections to revision of the tariff. There is no dissent in the Republican ranks, and very small dissent among the American people.

"If our opponents doubt our position, being that taken by the American people on that issue, I welcome them to the contest. I am sure an overwhelming majority of the people approve that position. The actual experience of a number of decades shows that the present method of revision is unsatisfactory, and we propose, according to your declaration, to change the method so that it will be satisfactory. Our principle has been right, and we shall continue to adhere to it, but the method has not been so satisfactory and we propose to adopt methods which will guarantee that the principle shall be applied with justice and equality.

"Our opponents in their efforts to find ground for objections have taken the other position, and declare that they will continue the methods which were wrong and will abandon the principle that is right. That is a perfectly just and accurately scientific description of the difference between the two parties on this issue."

Col. Roosevelt went on to say that he would like to add one thing to the Massachusetts platform, and that was the provision of which he spoke in the West for an examination periodically into the results of the operation of the tariff in order to determine exactly whether the labor for which the protection was chiefly demanded actually got its full share of the benefit. He declared that if it were determined that labor was not getting the protection afforded by the law he would be in favor of removing the duty, the prime reason for granting protection at all being to equalize the labor cost of production. This brought out a great demonstration of approval from all over the hall.

In all this Col. Roosevelt had not said a word that could be applied directly as an indorsement of Senator Lodge. He went on from this point to discuss the State campaign and found occasion to praise the Senator. He took up the record of Mr. Lodge in the Massachusetts Legislature and of his coming into this State twenty-six years ago to speak for Lodge. Then he told how he had followed the career of the Senator in Washington, watching it while he was Civil Service Commissioner and afterward as Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and finally during his nearly eight years in the White House when Senator Lodge had worked with him to carry out the policies of the party.

"It would be a calamity," he declared, "not to send Senator Lodge back to the Senate. In Washington no one was a more constant friend of real progressive legislation than he."

There was great cheering and applause at this.

He assailed Eugene N. Foss, Democratic candidate for Governor.

"It would be a bad thing for the people of this State," he said, "to elect a man who, having tried to dominate one party and having failed, now seeks to dominate another party. It would be a bad thing to elect a man who has made his money by speculation in stocks and who now seeks to rise in political life, not by his public record, for he has none, but by the naked force of effrontery and the power that comes from money"

YESTERDAY IN POLITICS.

Winfield A. Huppuch, Chairman of the Democratic State Committee, gave out a statement denying that the Standard Wall Paper Company, of which John A. Dix, Democratic candidate for Governor, is a Director, has any connection with any wall-paper trust or combination.

Ezra P. Prentice, Chairman of the Republican State Committee, returning from an up-State trip, declared that the election of Henry L. Stimson was assured. On the other hand Charles H. Young, the Republican lawyer, who has bolted the party ticket, declared he had received 1,940 letters from Republicans who would vote against Stimson.

Col. Roosevelt, before 8,000 highly enthusiastic people in Boston, declared that the Republican Party was now united for a tariff commission and for the declaration of the 1908 platform, and welcomed a tariff fight on those lines. He indorsed Senator Lodge as a progressive legislator.

Henry L. Stimson made a tour through Ontario County last night, speaking before fair crowds. He ended his day's trip at Geneva. Mr. Stimson answered the criticism of his opponents in regard to Republican extravagance by declaring that the State expenditures in the last twelve years had increased only 66 per cent., while in New York City, under a Tammany administration, the expenses of government had increased 110 per cent.

HEARST ATTACKS DIX.

Says Democratic Candidate Works His Employes Thirteen Hours a Day.

William Randolph Hearst had a cold last night and was unable to appear as advertised at two Independence League meetings held at Manhattan Casino, Eighth Avenue and 155th Street, and Niblo's Garden, Third Avenue and 170th Street. He sent his speech, which was read by Clarence J. Shearn, his personal attorney.

Mr. Hearst coined the word "Huppuchcrites" to describe what he called the inconsistent attitude of Dix and Huppuch on the tariff. Then he made an attack on Mr. Dix as an employer of labor. His speech read:

"Mr. Dix says that he believes in an eight-hour day, but what does Mr. Dix do? Mr. Dix and Mr. Huppuch employ hundreds of men in their paper mills. These men worked twelve hours a day for $1.65. When the other paper mills of the country had given their men an eight-hour day and raised their wages to over $2 a day Mr. Dix's employes thought they might ask for a little better wages and conditions for themselves. They were modest enough. They asked for a raise from $1.65 a day to $1.75 a day, mind you, for a twelve-hour day.

"Mr. Dix and Mr. Huppuch refused this demand until a strike was imminent, and then they granted the men 10 cents a day raise in wages provided the men worked five additional hours in the week. This arrangement compels the men to work thirteen hours a day on five days of the week.

"I think that Mr. Stimson is a personally honest man. I know that he represents a dishonest party. For every Grady in the Democratic Party there is an Aldridge in the Republican Party.

It is the test of real strength. Any good tailorman can produce a good garment if cost be not a consideration.

To produce a good garment—a very good garment—at a cost which is not as high as the quality, that is our strength.

You will find it manifested most forcibly in

Hackett-Carhart Suits and Overcoats for Men at $20, $22 and $25.

First you'll find the garments to be tailored—exceptionally well.

Then you'll find that the fabrics are soft and in good designs.

Lastly, you'll find the styles to be abreast with, if not a little ahead of, the hour.

RUSH TO CONFESS CUSTOMS FRAUDS

Importers, Frightened by the Duveen Indictments, Offer Cash Settlements.

$1,000,000 DUTIES INVOLVED

Government Undecided Whether to Compromise or Prosecute — Loeb Confirms Report of Confessions.

Several hundred thousand dollars more, it was learned yesterday, will be added to the revenues of the Government as a result of settlements offered by prominent importers, who within the last few weeks have confessed to undervaluation of dutiable merchandise entered at this port. This much was confirmed by Collector Loeb, who admitted that his visit to Washington on Thursday had something to do with the case of these merchants and their sudden quickening of conscience.

At present the Treasury Department and the Attorney General's Department in Washington are debating the question whether the voluntary confession of the importers so implicated shall act as a stopper to criminal prosecution for undervaluation. A decision will be reached on this proposition in about ten days, pending which time neither the names nor the exact amount involved in the latest confessions of undervaluation will be made public.

The payment of the reward to Richard Parr, who uncovered the sugar trust frauds, started the chain of confessions as to undervaluation

So many importers made confessions that the Collector thought it worth while to have the Treasury Department and the Attorney General's office make a definite decision as to the course which should be pursued. It would not be surprising if the recoveries from these confessions alone will run up close to $1,000,000 before the Collector is done.

The penalty for undervaluation is two years in prison and a fine of $5,000 for each offense. On the civil side the offender is subject to the collection of the duty and the seizure of the articles on which the frauds may be committed, if they still remain in his hands, or the collection of duty and the recovery of the cost value of the articles if they have passed from his possession.

STRAUS THANKS DRISCOLL.

Praises Former Commissioner's War on Short Measure Milk Bottles.

Nathan Straus has written to First Deputy Police Commissioner Driscoll thanking him for his advocacy of the proposed municipal mure pilk stations and praising his work against the short measure milk bottle while he was Commissioner of the Bureau of Weights and Measures. Mr. Straus's letter reads:

October 17, 1910.

Dear Mr. Driscoll:

I want to thank you for the splendid appeal you made at Cooper Union for the protection of the babies, and for your very generous estimate of the services that I have been able to render in the work of saving the defenseless little ones from preventable diseases and their mothers from the cares of sickness and the grief of death.

Naturally I was deeply touched by the expressions of the various speakers about my work, but that which pleased me most about the mass meeting was the evidence it afforded of a strong determination on the part of the people to permit no cessation of the efforts to save the babies from the diseases that are borne to them in raw milk.

Dr. Jacobi's concise and convincing summing up of the proofs of the efficacy of the methods for which I have fought these twenty years leaves no room for doubt as to their correctness.

What I have been permitted to do through my infant milk stations has been its own reward, and I have sought no other, but I have sought and do seek the extension of such life-saving agencies beyond the limits imposed by the means of one man and beyond the span of one man's life, and the mass meeting in Cooper Union encourages me to believe that my dream will be realized, and that the day will come when the slaughter of babies by raw milk will cease, and when every infant will have the health and strength that results from the substitution of properly modified and pasteurized milk for the dangerous raw milk that is now recklessly used in too many cases.

In exerting your influence in this direction you are supplementing the very important work that you are doing in your official capacity in protecting the housewife from the frauds of dishonest tradesmen. I have watched that work with keen interest, and take this opportunity to congratulate you on the vigor and enthusiasm with which you have confiscated false weights and measures, and I hope that the city will soon deal with equal energy with the far more serious evil of the sale of infected milk. The short-measure milk bottle is a crime against the pocketbook; the milk bottle filled with germs of disease is a crime against human life. Very sincerely yours. NATHAN STRAUS.

Mr. Straus sent a similar letter to President Mitchel of the Board of Aldermen a few days ago.

SUFFRAGIST BOOM STARTS.

Visitors Throng Headquarters at Hotel Normandie.

Things were booming at the Twenty-seventh Assembly District Woman Suffrage Party headquarters in the Hotel Normandie, Thirty-eighth Street and Broadway, yesterday, the first day that it has been open all day. Little Miss Edna Walther, the first blue child in "The Blue Bird" at The New Theatre, was one of the early visitors in the morning, and, taking a petition blank into the office of the hotel, brought back a number of signatures from men there.

In the evening Miss Inez Milholland stood outside the door handing out literature to passers by and inviting them in, while Mrs. Belmont, wearing a big black hat and long black satin coat, sat just inside the door, at the table where literature and Belmont suffrage buttons were being sold. The headquarters were well filled all the evening, and attracted a crowd most of the day.

WED IN SPITE OF ILLNESS.

J. J. Lennon, a City Employe, Goes from Ceremony to the Hospital.

John J. Lennon, a city employe, now in St. Peter's Hospital, Brooklyn, was stricken with appendicitis a few days ago, on the day set for his wedding to Miss Mary McGarry, of 357 Baltic Street. The ceremony was performed, however, at Mr. Lennon's home, by Mgr. James S. Duffy, pastor of St. Agnes's Roman Catholic Church, at Hoyt and Sacket Streets. Mr. Lennon lives at 180 Nevins Street.

His chances for recovery are good. Mrs. Lennon has been constantly at his bedside.

NATIONAL INDOOR MEET.

A. A. U. Championship Games Which Savor of International Import.

With the outdoor track and field championships now a matter of athletic history, devotees of the game are now pointing their competitive energies toward the two nights' series for titular honors in Madison Square Garden, Oct. 31 and Nov. 1.

Secretary James E. Sullivan has received assurances of the entry of Gwin Henry, of Eden, Texas, probably the most phenomenal sprinter since the days of Bernie Wefers. As a matter of fact the young Texan made the "two-twenty" men in the recent New Orleans games look like so many marathoners, and but for his poor starting—he having been penalized two yards and beaten but two feet—he probably would have done similar things to the "century" dashers.

That he is not another Dan Kelly is attested by the fact that he has beaten the best men in the United States, and New Yorkers are keen to see him.

This entry and that of Frank Lukeman, of Montreal, who likewise beat the cream of Metropolitan talent at the recent Canadian "champs," gives an international flavor to the coming games which promise to bristle with exciting contests.

The rivalry always engendered when the New York A. C. (Metropolitan champions,) and the Irish A. A. C., (National champions,) meet will again be fanned into flame at these games, as both teams will be on home ground and well able to have every available man in the fray.

For the senior events, embracing both nights, there will be eight running events, two hurdles, five jumps, three weights, two pole vaults, and a walk, while the junior series will include three runs, two hurdles, four jumps, a weight, and a walk.

The events for the first night, Oct. 31, for seniors are: Seventy yards, 300 yards, 1,000 yards, and two mile runs; 70 yards' high hurdle, with the innovation of ten yards, instead of fifteen to the first hurdle; standing broad jump, running hop, step and jump, "56" for height, 12-pound shot, running high jump, and pole vault for distance. For juniors, 880 yards, one-mile walk, 440-yard low hurdle, standing high jump, and three standing broad jumps.

For the succeeding night the seniors will meet in runs at 60 yards, 150 yards, 600 yards, and five miles; 440 yards' low hurdles, standing high jump, three standing broad jumps, 24-pound shot, three-mile walk, and pole vault. During the same session the juniors will hold runs at 75 yards and one mile; 70 yards' high hurdle, running high jump, running hop, step and jump, and "56" for height.

Other championships carded by the A. A. U. and their dates are: Ten-mile, Nov 5; junior cross-country, Nov, 19, and senior cross-country, Nov. 26, all at Celtic Park and for National titles.

WILLIE LEWIS WINS OVER SAILOR BURKE

Victor in Fine Form Beats His Rugged Opponent at National Club.

While Sailor Burke and Willie Lewis did not furnish the excitement in their ten-round go at the National Sporting Club last night that they did in their fight at the Fairmont Club some months ago, there was enough bad spirit shown and blood-letting to satisfy those who look for the spectacular in this sort of thing.

The go went the full ten rounds and a bit over, the extra belligerency being on account of Burke's bad temper. He tried to do after the official finish of the go what he was unable to do during the progress of the bout.

Like the last encounter between these two Lewis won, but unlike the last session he won only by his boxing ability, where before he knocked Burke out.

Burke was badly cut up as a result of the meeting, but full of fight all the time. He skated over the thin ice of the rules repeatedly, and earned the bad grace of the unusually large crowd, which filled the club house.

Lewis never boxed better in his life, and he departed from his customary style of sailing in with both arms flying and his head down. He had evidently made up his mind that he couldn't afford to take chances with the man who nearly had him out the last time they were in the ring together.

Lewis had all the better of the straight boxing, but Burke held his own in the close fighting, and wore down Willie in the clinches by his exceedingly rough work. The ten three-minute sessions were for the most part taken up by the many clinches, which made it less satisfactory than a more open fight.

When they came into the ring it was evident that both had been training, though Burke had the advantage of weight and height. Celebrated handlers served in the respective corners, Tom O'Rouke being in Burke's corner and Kid McCoy behind Lewis.

The first exhibition of bad blood was shown when Lewis refused to shake hands with Burke. Lewis started the fun by pitching into Burke after the first bell tap. The lead ended in a clinch. Lewis led again—another clinch. The referee soon saw that he was going to have a hard night, and cautioned the fighters. Willie landed a light left on the chin and the sailor planted two stiff lefts in the stomach. There was more clinching than fighting in this round.

Lewis went into Burke as he sprang from his corner, and the rush ended in a clinch. The Sailor missed left and right swings, and Lewis sent over a left that found a resting place on the Sailor's nose.

After the break from the clinch Lewis feinted a left high and brought his right over on Burke's head as the latter dug his left mitt into Lewis's stomach. Lewis was setting the pace, and landed left on chest. The Sailor forced Willie back on the ropes and was pounding away at Lewis's body when the bell rang.

Willie led a left, which fell short. Then he tried another, and the Sailor countered with right on the mouth. Burke essayed a high left lead, and as he came in Lewis brought up his left almost from the floor and caught the Sailor flush on the right cheek. The force of this blow sent Burke to his knees. He bled profusely, but he was not in bad shape. He tried to get back at Lewis and came in close. Willie tried to get in a fair one, but the Sailor was too wary for him.

As Lewis came at Burke in the fourth round the latter welcomed into a clinch, then roughed and threw Lewis. On the next square-off the Sailor landed a left swing on Lewis's chin, and Willie came back at him with both hands working—result, a clinch. Lewis worked on the Sailor's bloody nose with satisfaction to himself.

Lewis jumped at Burke in the fifth and landed a hard left on the neck. The Sailor rushed, feinted with left, and brought his right hard over on the side of the head. Lewis landed a light left, and the Sailor returned the compliment. Lewis pushed Burke's head back with a straight left in the nose. Willie ducked out of the way of several wicked-looking swings.

The sixth round was almost a repetition of the preceding period, with Lewis jabbing and swinging his left with fair effect, and the Sailor working for the clinches, which were his saving chances. Once he got Willie stooping, and before the latter could jump back Burke swung left and right stingers. Willie finally saw a hole and ran, then boxed Burke off.

The seventh was Lewis's round.

The next round was also Willie's, though the sailor started the fun and walked into Lewis, rushing him to the ropes, where he whaled away at Lewis's body, but Willie was well covered. The latter put over hard lefts on Burke's puffed face and the sailor didn't land a fair blow during the entire round.

The ninth round was all in Lewis's favor. There was little variation of their respective styles. Willie did all the leading and landed what few goods blows there were, while Burke clinched at every opportunity, and never lost a trick in the embraces.

Burke tried hard to reach his slippery opponent in the last round, but his efforts for the most part were futile. Willie kept working on the sore face, and Burke was getting madder all the time. He tried Willie by his rough tactics, but Lewis always came back with a left on the nose or mouth.

Bull Leach settled Sailor Moore in the second round of their four-round encounter.

Christy Williams had the better of Bill Brown, the Dixie Kid's brother, in the semi-final, which was a rather poor six-round affair.

Draw at Lehigh A. C.

Joe Phillips and Benny Franklin, both local lightweights, fought a fast ten-round draw last night before a large crowd at the Lehigh A. C. of the Bronx. The contest was a fast one all through the ten rounds and kept the crowd in a constant state of excitement, it being a nip and tuck affair, first Phillips would show a flash and carry the work to Franklin, then he would slow up and Franklin would come strong. Phillips had the advantage in the first four rounds by getting home some good and effective blows to the body which slowed Franklin up, but toward the end Franklin showed he was able to stand the onslaught, and starting a rally in the last three sessions did most of the work and was entitled to a draw. In the semi-final of six rounds between Billy West and Harry Blake, the referee had to stop the contest in the second round in order to save Blake from a knockout.

HUSBAND SHOOTS DESTROYER OF HOME

Searches Two Years for Him Before Getting a Chance to Avenge His Wrong.

NO ATTEMPT TO ESCAPE

"I Don't Care What Happens to Me Now," He Says—Just Attacked by Rival's Friends.

A broad-shouldered, flashily-dressed man with several companions rushed up to a small thin-chested man at Orchard Street near Broome Street last night and slapped his face. The small man drew a revolver and shot the other above the heart. Then, turning to the crowd that gathered in a moment, he said in a trembling voice:

"I won't run away. I don't care what happens now."

He waited till Policeman Smolick ran up at the sound of the shots and handed him the revolver, saying:

"My heart is broken. I don't care what they do to me now."

At the Eldridge Street Station he said he was Elias Slhuth, a tailor, of 185 Orchard Street. He said he came to this country from Russia about seven years ago with his wife and their daughter Julia, now 14 years old. They lived happily together, he said, until about two years ago Morris Schwalsky, a plumber of 25 Delancey Street, appeared, and not long afterward spirited away his wife and the little girl.

Slhuth said he made frantic efforts to locate them. One night last week, he said, he met his wife walking the streets, and she told him she had been placed by Schwalsky in a resort and was kept there through fear that if she ran away her abductor would harm Julia, whose whereabouts she did not know. Slhuth said he tried in vain to induce his wife to return to him, as she said he could not protect her aganst the vengeance which her captor would take on her if she returned home. She refused to tell him where she was detained. Finally, to induce him to go home, she said she would try to get away on the following day.

The very next night, Slhuth said, her captors must have got wind of his intention to induce his wife to return to him, for he was set upon and badly beaten in the hallway of his home by a gang of men he had not seen before. Then, yesterday, Slhuth bought a revolver and decided to search the streets for his wife and to lead her home. Instead, he said, he met Schwalsky and members of a gang, who rushed at him and were attacking him when he fired.

Schwalsky was removed to the Gouverneur Hospital. It was said there that he will die. At the address in Delancey street lived a brother of Schwalsky, who said the plumber did not live there but merely took meals there occasionally.

Slhuth was locked up on a charge of felonious assault, which will be changed to homicide if Schwalsky dies. Last night the police began an investigation into Slhuth's story and a search for the wife and daughter. They could not locate either.

GOLF RECORD FOR WOMAN.

Miss Phoepoe Covers Chestnut Hill Course in 90 Strokes.

BOSTON, Oct. 21.—Although Miss F. O'G. Phoepoe of the Royal Montreal Club established a new record of 90 for the Chestnut Hill Golf Club course today, a handicap of 14 strokes greater than hers gave the victory to Mrs. W. F. Smith of Brae Burn in a medal-play handicap tournament under the auspices of the Woman's Golf Association of Boston. Miss Phoepoe's net score was 88 and Mrs. Smith's 86. Miss Dorothy Campbell of Hamilton, nOtario, the National women's champion, was second only to Miss Phoepoe in her gross score, finishing in 92, but her handicap of plus 1 made her net score 93. NOTES FOR THE GOLFERS.

Left-handed players will get a tryout in the annual tournament especially arranged for them at Midlothian Country Club, Chicago, to-day. The tournament is open to any left-handed player who is a member of any of the clubs associated with the United States Golf Association or the Western Golf Association. So far as is known, this event is the only one of its kind in the country. There are about sixteen members of the Midlothian Club who are "southpaws," and the idea originally came from these players. Last year players attended from New York, Pennsylvania, and even as far as Texas.

At a recent meeting of the Forest Hill Field Club it was voted to increase the dues to $40 a year. This will give the organization extra funds to expend on the contemplated improvements, such as piping the course and developing additional ground for the new holes. The officers elected for the ensuing year are as follows: President—Thomas Allsopp; Vice President—Herbert W. Taylor; Treasurer—Robert Kuebler; Secretary—W. H. Dale; Financial Secretary—E. W. Pierson. A. G. Heller, T. J. Lintoot, W. W. Lyons, A. H. Gussman, and H. B. Salmon will, with the officers named, constitute the Board of Governors.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, OCT. 22, 1910.

MR. DIX AND MR. ROOSEVELT.

Mr. ROOSEVELT is doing all he can to make the campaign in New York one in which he and Mr. DIX are the chief figures. That is his right if his political associates consent to it, or if, dissenting from and resenting it, as some of them do, they are powerless to prevent it. But it is a course involving some serious responsibility and liable to entail serious consequences. Mr. ROOSEVELT, for example, in his most recent speeches, raises the issue whether he or Mr. DIX is the more intelligent and loyal tariff reformer. On that question we may leave Mr. DIX to speak for himself. There are phases of it that deserve his most candid consideration, and we hope that they will receive it. Especially we hope that he will be able to say that he disapproved wholly the application of his associate, Mr. HUFFUCH, for an increase in tariff favors already unjustifiably great.

But there will still remain the issue Mr. ROOSEVELT has made, which involves this question: Is Mr. ROOSEVELT himself so good a tariff reformer, so consistent and effective a foe of tariff-bred trusts, that the people of the State would do well, at the approaching election, to strengthen him in his ambitious plans for the Presidency in 1912? That is what he is working for, and he takes little pains to conceal the fact. He has seized the machinery of his party; he has dictated the platform and the candidate; he has monopolized the canvass; he has made the issues, and given preposterous prominence to National questions. He has practically ignored the special matters in which the portion of the party with which he professes to co-operate is interested. He fills every hall with strident proclamation of his own views, his own position, his own intentions. He seeks to fill, and in the embarrassing situation of the party he does fill, the stage, and centres the attention of all on himself. And while he thus turns the canvass toward National issues, he makes himself the chief National issue, forcing his party to carry, not merely the weight of its own troubles in the State, but the burden of his ambitions.

In these circumstances it is inevitable that his criticism of Mr. DIX as a tariff reformer should make people think of his own record. We should rather say his lack of record in tariff reform and in practical opposition to the brood of trusts spawned by the tariff. He was for seven years President. During that time he became familiar with the relations of the trust managers toward the tariff, with their influence in maintaining, interpreting, and administering it, with their activity in party politics and the bonds under which they placed the party managers. He was in daily contact with the evils and abuses that finally led to such a revolt in the party that a promise of revision was wrung from the National Convention in 1908. From the beginning to the end of his incumbency of the Presidential office he never raised a finger to correct these evils and abuses or to sustain the popular demand for revision of the tariff. In his agitation for the reform of trade combinations the evidence of the baleful influence of the exorbitant tariff in fostering combinations was constantly presented to him. It left him indifferent. The liberal tariff sentiment, which ultimately ripened into the progressive movement, of which the tariff was the chief objective, grew to imposing proportions under his eyes. So far as concerned the tariff he ignored it, and consistently threw the weight of his favor and his influence on the side of the standpatters.

Why? Because he felt that the standpatters at that time held the decision of his plans in their hands, because he would not endanger his control of the machinery of the party and imperil its invaluable support of him. He turned all his attention to matters that admitted of tremendous declamation and proposed no definite, practical measures. This year after his long absence in other lands he discovered, on his return, that the opposition to the tariff had got beyond his control, and when he went West he found voice for denunciation of the notorious corruption and bargaining by which it had been foiled. But he no sooner came back to his own State than he saw that he must moderate the course he had chosen in the West and, for the promotion of his immediate plans, must indorse the monstrous Payne law. In so doing he makes the tariff and his record as to the tariff the chief issue in the campaign. It is a droll way of commending himself for 1912.

IN THE HALL OF FAME AT LAST.

EDGAR ALLAN POE is at last in the Hall of Fame of New York University. No American man of letters needed the honor less. He had been in the Hall of Fame of the American people for more than threescore years. But in the two previous elections the electors, into whose hands is intrusted the filling of the classic colonnade on University Heights, passed him by. His friends—many more friends, sadly enough, than he had when he died, and apparently an ever-widening circle—demanded for him not the honor but his just due. When the years dragged on and still he was neglected and popular agitation had reached almost its height, Father TABB, the blind poet-priest, gave this withering utterance to a sentiment entertained by thousands:

Into the charnel Hall of Fame
None but the dead shall go;
Then write not there the living name
Of EDGAR ALLAN POE.

POE's election yesterday was an overwhelming triumph for his admirers. With OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES, he received 69 votes out of a possible 97. He made a gain of 27 votes since the last election, five years ago, and goes into the Hall of Fame with a clear margin of 18 votes. Two causes lie in the background of this unusual jump; one the removal by previous choice of some of his strongest competitors; the other the cry of "Shame!" raised throughout the land. One elector, impatient of ther delay, exclaimed: "If POE isn't famous, who is?"

Sure enough, who is?

THE REPUBLICAN EQUILIBRATOR.

When Mr. WELLMAN returned to earth from his trip among the fogs and the clouds he attributed his failure in the ocean venture to his equilibrator. He discovered that he could not succeed either with it or without it. The Republican Party also is very much up in the air, and is making a similar discovery regarding its equilibrator, meaning our distinguished ex-President. Mr. WELLMAN further discovered that this appliance was not only dangerous in and of itself, but because of its contents. The gasoline in the Republican equilibrator's interior is now leaking dangerously. It is suffusing the atmosphere, and there is danger of an explosion if he persists in such careless handling of loaded topics as marked his latest utterances here. This is said with full recognition of the fact that he did with his large audience as he would. It is for that precise reason that his brand of camp meeting economics constitutes a public menace. The idea seemed an excellent jest to him, and his audience laughed uproariously at it. Why is it that the suggestion is not so preposterous as it ought to be?

His explanation is that those who object to his methods of treating delicate questions are unable to distinguish between rendering service and swindling. He knows the difference, and under the new Nationalism there will be a Federal official at Washington with similar qualifications to administer the law, and to dispense with the law. Under this system there will be no miscarriages of justice because there will be no courts. There will be no presumption of innocence, and no provision for conviction of guilt only after a trial before a jury of the neighborhood of the accused. A National official, far removed from sympathies with the malefactors, will cut all the red tape, and there will be decisions that will decide. This will be managed without any amendment of the Constitution. It would not even be necessary to have any more laws. A mere Executive order would suffice for the reform if an Executive of his own sort were only returned to the White House.

It is no secret that nothing like that can happen under President TAFT. The menace to our institutions lies not in the fact that this system has been proposed in his predecessor's official papers, but that numerous and representative audiences applaud sentiments in accordance with this epitome. The thing would have been ordered on the spot at Terrace Garden if such a plebiscite could have been effective. It ought to be an impossible jest. It is a sad reality, worthy of denunciation and opposition at every opportunity even to the most remote and indirect applications. A vote against STIMSON is a vote against the new Nationalism, which should be checked while it is young and tender, because it already finds those who both defend and minimize it.

There was no sign that that large audience of New Yorkers knew that it was listening to the promises of a man whose performances discredit his words. How happens it, for example, that he was able to praise STIMSON's prosecution of the Sugar Trust? Why was not that nest of thieves cleaned up by himself? It was not because he did not know of it. The same evidence was presented to him, and rejected. The menace to good government lies in the fact that there are followers for such a leader.

Mr. ROOSEVELT must have the sensibilities of a cultured gentleman, and they must give him pain at times. He must remember that when he received academic honors from Yale he declared that he never tried to right a public wrong that there was not a Yale man beside him with loyal support. That is still true. And yet there is now a Yale man in the same great office in need of like support, and where it may be asked is the Harvard loyalty? Was it at Cambridge that this pupil of ELIOT learned the notions worthy of an economic Bedlam or Babel that he propounds amid the cheers of the uninformed and thoughtless? And is it indeed true that these things are a merry farce which will laugh itself off the stage?

THE POLICE REORGANIZATION.

It is well for the Police Department, it is well for the city, that Mr. BAKER is no longer Police Commissioner. His unfitness for that post, his incompetence, or his unwillingness, to perform its duties have been sufficiently demonstrated. Deputy Commissioner BUGHER spoke with knowledge and full warrant of facts when he wrote to the Mayor: "I cannot see how matters can continue much longer as they are without a complete breakdown of police control." The Mayor has for some time been aware of BAKER's unfitness. But for the attempt upon his life, which so long disabled him, it can hardly be doubted that he would some time ago have taken measures to reorganize the force. Such a task is not an easy one, for it is by no means easy to find a man fit and willing to be Police Commissioner. Those who are fit are not always willing, since the danger to reputation assumed in taking control of a force which includes that perilous "corrupt minority" of officers is obvious.

Much depends upon Commissioner CROPSEY himself. He is a man of good standing and excellent character. He is well known to the Mayor, and must have the Mayor's full confidence, otherwise Mr. GAYNOR could not have taken the risk of appointing him to a place of trust and responsibility which so largely involves the success of his own Administration. Ability and uprightness the new Commissioner possesses. That will not be enough. He must have, also, administrative capacity, he must know how to handle men. More than that, he must command the respect of the force and of its officers. Of a part of the officers of the force, that "corrupt minority" to which the Mayor alludes, it is probably not going too far to say that their respect can be won only through fear. Loyalty and a sense of duty will not keep them straight. These men must be made to understand that if they persist in the practice of "graft" they will be brought to book. In other words, they must stand in terror of the new Commissioner, as many of them did stand in terror of Commissioner BINGHAM, who, with all his stern intentions and efficiency, was not able entirely to break up the odious police "system."

Commissioner CROPSEY's work will be made easier and his success in the office promoted by the division of powers and responsibilities which the Mayor announces. Apparently it is to be the duty of Deputy DRISCOLL to attend to the "cleaning up" of the city, to bring about those conditions of respect for law and for decency which will prevent the offensive obtrusion upon the public notice of evildoers and their ways. More important, probably, as a means of uprooting police "graft" is the transfer of the plain-clothes men to the new head of the detective force, Mr. FLYNN. This transfer takes away from corrupt Captains their chief instruments of extortion and puts into the hands of an officer superior to them the means of detecting their villainies. The Mayor and the city have a right to expect of Mr. FLYNN not only the seeking out and closing up of illegal places now all too openly carrying on their trade, but also the suppression of crimes of violence like those of the Black Handers, which have become all too common in New York City.

Under Commissioner BAKER the criminals of the town have been rapidly getting beyond police control. The success or failure of the new police system will be determined from the very start. First impressions go far. The crooks and the criminals are quick to draw inferences. If they conclude from the first manifestations of the new police policy that this city is going to be highly unsafe for persons of their kind, the Mayor and his new appointees will earn the gratitude and will receive the congratulations of all decent citizens.

THE CRIPPEN DEFENSE.

The defense of Dr. CRIPPEN, accused on strong circumstantial evidence of murdering his wife, mutilating her body, and burying it in the cellar of his London house, is bold, coherent, and well considered. As to the effect it may have on the minds of the jurymen, who must presently return the verdict which will decide CRIPPEN's fate, no conjectures made from condensed reports of the trial would be of value. In the cross-examination of the prisoner yesterday he met a severe ordeal with the boldness and coherent utterance he displayed in the direct examination. He will surely be remembered in criminal annals for his remarkable self-control.

The fact of CRIPPEN's flight with the LENEVE girl is thus far the strongest evidence of his guilt that has been made public. It is probably the strongest evidence against him the prosecution possesses. It seems unaccountable, if he was guiltless of murder, and was unaware of the burial of mutilated human remains under the flooring of his cellar, the discovery of which was inevitable, after the wife's disappearance had caused alarm and suspicion among her friends.

The testimony of the prosecution as to the identity of the body is not clear. Traces of a poison called hyoscin were discovered as well as a scar which, in the circumstances, may have been no scar. The defense met this testimony ably. The defense also astonished the prosecution by admitting that CRIPPEN had arranged to escape from the steamship Montrose at night, two days before his arrest. This is a strange admission, which tends to deepen the whole mystery. CRIPPEN also admits his use of hyoscin in his professional work.

One thing is certain. The case has been handled with admirable skill and celerity by the British police and the courts. There has been no unnecessary delay. The trial followed quickly the examination in the Magistrate's court, and thus far has been well conducted. The verdict will be quickly reached, and it will be based on the evidence. The known moral defects of the accused will not be permitted unduly to influence judgment. Up to the present time CRIPPEN has shown in the court proceedings a degree of audacity and nervous self-control quite out of keeping with the attempted escape from the law before the law was well on his track.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Bad Advice Given in Good French.

That New York, the gateway of a Nation, or, rather, of a continent, should have a newspaper for each group of strangers arriving, and only too often settling, here, is natural enough. Indeed, this has come to be, or at least to seem, rather a congeries of colonies, each with its own language, than a city in the older sense of a homogeneous community. Much more remarkable is it that Winnipeg, so new and so remote, should already have, according to a report of origin to make it credible, periodical publications in forty-two languages and dialects, including the Canadian variant of English.

To be really startled, however, one must have his attention called to the fact that even in the heart of New England foreigners not yet even lingually assimilated are come to be so numerous that they prefer, demand, and get the news printed for them in words that the waning representatives of the "old stock," so recently almost unalloyed by any alien admixture, cannot understand. Such a shock, with a lancinating little pain, is the result of receiving from Worcester, Mass., a chance copy of L'Opinion Publique, a French paper, well edited and better printed than most of those that come from Paris, and "carrying" enough advertising to indicate prosperity.

Of course we all know that Worcester is a big manufacturing town, containing many artisans of French Canadian origin, but why do they thus stand apart from their neighbors? And, as if to emphasize their separateness, L'Opinion Publique gives prominent editorial space to a vehement, almost passionate, defense of the language spoken by its readers as being, not as certain base detractors have said, a "français déformé," but the real thing, pure and uncorrupted. That contention is just a bit amusing, since the Canadian patois not only exists, with its innumerable and interesting reminders of the old French provinces whence came, to be thereafter isolated from later changes, the original settlers of New France, but that patois has in recent years won for itself a respectable, though small, place in dialectic literature, both prose and verse.

Of course L'Opinion Publique does not claim that all the Frenchmen in Canada and the United States speak "good" French, but it says that many of them do, and, under the impulse of a strange and lamentable misguiding, it urges its readers to see to it that their children devote more of their schooltime hours to the learning of correct speech—in French! A deadly enemy could not give worse advice.

Learning from Experience.

Presumably JOSEPH BRUCKER, the German-American journalist who purposes or proposes to cross the Atlantic from east to west next Spring in a dirigible balloon, will profit by, through avoiding, the admitted mistakes made in the designing and equipment of the unfortunate America. That is his duty as well as his privilege, if he attempts the perilous trip. But some of the changes he seems to have in mind are not obviously promising.

His gas container, for instance, is to be smaller, not larger, than Mr. WELLMAN's was, while the teaching of the recent experiment was the other way. Again, for the heavy, jointed "equilibrator" that developed such alarming peculiarities when dragging over heavy seas, Mr. BRUCKER thinks he can substitute a long tube through which water ballast can be pumped up or released as greater or less ascensional power is required. That sounds well, but a huge volume of hydrogen gas expands with great rapidity, and contracts as fast, under the alternating influences of heat and cold, and it would take a big pump and a big tube to keep the balloon anywhere near a constant level in that manner—too big, in all probability, to be practicable.

In planning to carry more powerful engines, however, Mr. BRUCKER is quite right, as Mr. WELLMAN knew only too well when he started, and as well as he knew when he came back. Correct, also, is the assertion that success in such a voyage can only be attained in a dirigible by utilizing the most favorable winds where and when the most advanced meteorological knowledge says they are to be found. On that subject, recent investigations of the flights made by the migratory birds throw much light, and further inquiry on the same line will doubtless add to it.

The birds do not fly when they want to, but only when they have the assistance of the great cyclonic movements of the atmosphere, and it is in determining, on that ground, the day and hour to start that "instinct" illustrates its wonderfulness vastly more than in its imagined ability to serve as a guide through the trackless air. The birds never attempt long flights against the wind, though their motors are vastly better than our best, and when men get to be as weather-wise as the birds are, the possibilities and the limitations of dirigible ballooning will become matters of certainty, instead of, as now, little more than matters of chance and luck.

A Job for the New Policemen.

Complaints are constantly reaching us, and observation justifies them, as to the reckless speed at which automobiles are driven through the city streets. The evil seems to have increased since the passage of the Callan law, and the police either do not know what they can or ought to do under the provisions of that statute, or, for some mysterious reasons of their own, they have agreed not to enforce it.

Whatever the explanation may be, the chauffeurs apparently do about as they please now, and what they please to do is to act as if they owned the streets and as if pedestrians and other vehicles than automobiles had just one right—that of keeping out of the way of the motor cars if they can. Indeed, one might imagine that even this was not a right, but a privilege. The worst of the reckless driving is to be seen on Fifth Avenue, not because the chauffeurs using that thoroughfare are a particularly wicked tribe, but presumably because the absence of street cars there makes speeding safer—for the automobilists.

The remedying of this abuse should be one of the first, as it is not one of the least important, tasks confronting the reorganized police, and the promptness with which the new men undertake and accomplish the needed reform will be a good test of their intentions and efficiency.

TRIBUTES TO WELLMAN.

More Newspaper Comments on the Gallant Fight He Made.

From The Baltimore Sun.

Those who set down as "foolhardy" the attempt of Walter Wellman and his crew to cross the Atlantic in a dirigible balloon fail to grasp its significance. Wellman's voyage is certain to give us a better knowledge of air currents and the influence of storms upon aircraft. Though he himself may never again be gratified by achieving his ambition to fly across the Atlantic, he may succeed in blazing the way so that those who come after him will make a path through the air from continent to continent.

Animated by Sincere Purpose.

From The Indianapolis Star.

A good many people who had watched Walter Wellman's career in connection with balloons were extremely skeptical as to whether he really and seriously meant to attempt the crossing of the Atlantic. He suffered many gibes on account of these doubts and The Star perpetrated not a few of them. It is only just to him, therefore, to acknowledge that latest events show him to have been seemingly animated by a sincere purpose to carry out his plan. Although he failed in the execution, the failure is presumably no fault of his, whatever it may show as to lack of judgment in making the venture.

Successful in a Broad Sense.

From The Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

The disastrous voyage of the America has not been in vain, from the standpoint of technical aeronautics. Nor can men who have risked their lives in a vital experiment be said to have failed. In a broad sense, Walter Wellman has achieved success. He has abundantly demonstrated that the art of dirigible ballooning must be reconstructed before the dream of crossing the Atlantic in an airship can be realized.

It is more than possible that from the failure of Wellman and his engineers to reach the other side, ultimate success in aerial transatlantic navigation may be evolved.

Wellman Did Make Good.

From The Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

Walter Wellman has made good at last. That the atmospheric navigators themselves came back alive is matter for congratulation. We are also glad that the cat was saved. Now let the foolishness of trying to cross the Atlantic Ocean in a balloon be stopped. The ocean is wider and more dangerous than the English Channel.

Too Low and Too Slow.

From The Washington Post.

Wellman flew too low and too slow. A drag anchor in the shape of an equilibrator—a what-is-it—held him within 200 feet of the water and impeded his progress. The balloon showed great stability under the long, terrific strain, but stability alone did not suffice. Nor could the dogged resolution of Wellman and his men overcome the handicaps. But who can say that Walter Wellman, starting across the Atlantic under the most favorable auspices, such as should attend his next effort, will not reach his port of destination?

A Notable Effort Anyway.

From The Indianapolis News.

No doubt of it, Wellman and his crew made a notable effort in their balloon flight. The wind that carried them from above Nantucket to Hatteras, where they were rescued, shows how helpless a "dirigible" is; shows, if you please, how far we have to come before journeying in the air takes on the quality of certitude. But that this will some day be attained there can hardly be a doubt. Mankind has triumphed over too many "insuperable" obstacles to become fainthearted.

They Deserve Homage.

From The Schnectady Gazette.

Walter Wellman and the five men who cast their lot with him to achieve in the face of almost impossible odds, deserve the homage, the admiration, and the respect of the world.

A Thrilling Narrative.

From The Baltimore American.

The Wellman recital may be but the first chapter in a continuous narrative, as the navigator promises to continue some of the same characters in subsequent chapters of air enterprise. Lovers of vital endeavors and vital narratives wish him good luck and pay tribute to him both as an unexampled explorer of the air and as a writer of great charm.

PUBLIC SPEAKING.

Would Discourage an Art Now Being Taught to Young Men.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

For several months there appeared in the advertising columns of THE TIMES a request by its business management that readers should file complaint if in their judgment any objectionable advertisement should appear. Availing myself of the invitation, I protest against the announcement of the West Side Young Men's Christian Association that it has formed a club to teach pupils "how to talk effectively in politics, society, at dinners, and public meetings," &c.

This is a dreadful threat, based apparently on the belief that too much is not enough. We all talk too much in private, public, and when asleep. A few minutes ago I met a man parading the streets engaged in earnest, even vehement conversation with himself and with the enthusiastic conviction that he had an appreciative auditor. We are all "bores until wanted," as the genial "Autocrat" says, and even the parrot of classic lore remarked after being despoiled of its plumage by the monkey: "My principle trouble is that I talk too much."

We are simply and complexedly inundated by vocalism from unsought-for sources. It consists of caution, denunciation, importunity, congratulation, and the knot is usually tied with some form of self-aggrandizement or place hunting. We all want to talk back, but are not always fortunate in opportunity.

We must call a public gathering not an audience but "spectators," because only half listen, others don't understand, few care, some disbelieve, and the rest forget all about it. It is like a moving-picture show in an institution for the blind, or a piano organ before a deaf and dumb asylum. Public speech should be forbidden by law unless a valid excuse for its utterance is offered and accepted by competent authorities.

QUIETUDE.

New York, Oct. 20, 1910.

Whitney and Delany.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your editorial article in to-day's TIMES anent the candidacy of Justice Whitney and the criticism of the local Democratic party for its failure to nominate him will not strike an independent mind as entirely just. Mr. Roosevelt's attempt to make capital out of this incident displays the weakness of his cause; and its transparency as a device to inflame voters is a sample of politics of the lowest order, unworthy of a man holding a high place in public affairs. The unsuccessful effort that is being made to inject this fictitious issue into the campaign is doomed to failure as it is built upon a mischievous conception of a well settled custom that should not be trifled with.

The splendid character and unquestioned ability of Mr. Denaly commend his candidacy to all voters irrespective of political affiliations, and it behooves the electorate at large to rebuke this ill-concealed attempt to bolster up a losing cause by the injection into the campaign of a distractive and dishonest issue.

TRI-BOROUGH PLANS.

Mr. Sprague States His Position with Respect to the Engineers' Meeting.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

THE TIMES was courteous enough at a time when popular interest was absorbed with politics and aviation to take notice of the informal engineering meeting held last Monday to discuss the tri-borough plans issued by the Public Service Commission. I note that its Chairman finds hidden motive in the near coincidence in the dates of the meeting and the time for receiving of bids for the construction with private capital of the tri-borough system. He suggests that engineers should have earlier criticised these plans, and states that the various features have from time to time been open for public discussion. A more correct statement was possible, for while true in some measure as to route, now generally condemned by all traffic experts not in the employ of the commission, the engineering plans themselves were never made public until the 1st of September, and it was, of course, impossible to discuss their details prior to such public issuance.

I formulated the plan of initiating a meeting of engineers to publicly discuss much that the commission itself has always avoided at the earliest possible date that arrangements could be made in view of other engineering meetings. There was, however, no plan of one-sided criticism. The Mayor and the Chairman of the Public Service Commission, as well as the Chamber of Commerce and the City Club, were specifically invited to participate or to be represented by delegated authority, as well as department officials and engineers if not deemed against public interest. The Mayor was not able to attend on account of his voice. The letter to Chairman Willcox was as follows:

Sept. 30, 1910.

Dear Sir: In accord with the spirit of the suggestion appearing in a recent article by his Honor, Mayor Gaynor, there will be held on Oct. 17 at the United Engineering Building, 25 West Thirty-ninth Street, and under the auspices primarily of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, an informal public engineering meeting, to which members of other engineering societies and people generally interested in transportation problems are to be invited, to discuss the rapid transit situation in New York as it has been focused by the issue of the specifications and invitations to bid for the tri-borough route.

It is desirable that this should not be simply an engineering discussion, nor one-sided in possible criticism, but on the contrary that varied viewpoints shall be presented by those in authority to speak on the subject.

As head of the commission responsible for present developments, it would afford us pleasure to have the commission's attitude presented by yourself, and if that should be inconvenient, by some one delegated to speak for you.

While initially professional, the meeting will be informal, and it is hoped that some measure of clear understanding, and possibly some advance in the public interest may be attained by frank interchange of views.

It is proper to assure you that the meeting proposed is dictated by civic engineering interests only, and not representative of any other interest whatever, financial or transportation.

I am leaving town for the week-end, but shall be here again on Monday, and should you wish any additional information before making your decision, I am at your service to personally explain anything that may be necessary. Very truly yours.

This expressed clearly enough the object of the meeting, and gave him every opportunity to defend, if it was defensible, the commission's project.

Having no personal interest in or reason to favor the Interborough Rapid Transit Company and being equally indifferent to the opinions of the members of the Public Service Commission, I took the one course which seemed best, and presented before 800 engineers and traffic men my views on a public engineering question, at the same time inviting the fullest alternative expressions. I am quite content to accept their judgment as to the wisdom of my attitude and the soundness of my conclusions.

I predicted the ultimate failure of any project for private construction and operation of the tri-borough system with an annual interest and sinking fund burden four times that borne on like items by the Interborough Company, and I repeat here the prophecy that if undertaken it means financial disaster, and an operative deficit which would have to be faced by the city, as is the deficit in the operation of the municipal ferries. Without the slightest regard to who temporarily operates the present city-owned system, it forms the natural nucleus which should be extended, and it would seem that there is some equitable method by means of which extensions of that system can be brought about without undue delay, but if the Interborough Company is not amenable to reasoning, it is certainly possible to build a competing system more nearly meeting the city's needs which in time will form part of that which it owns and controls.

FRANK J. SPRAGUE.

THE LOSER.

The sun withheld its light that day; that night the stars were dim;
The portent of the earth and sky was ominous for him;
There was no gladness in the world; the fields held no delight;
The day of all his joys dissolved and melted into night;
He rubbed his pitching arm and felt the muscles rise and fall;
He wondered what the cruel fate that lost
the game of ball;
He wandered idly by the brook, forsaken and alone,
To be a hero nevermore, unsung, unwept, unknown.

'Twas only yesterday he was the idol of the team!
Those cheers and loud hurrahs he heard
—could they have been a dream?
They called him Tim the Tiger then!
Small boys by scores he saw
To bear his glove, his coat, his shoes, with gratitude and awe.
With joy they saw his arm laid bare—that mighty arm and brown
That wound itself about his head and mowed the batsmen down;
And when he went upon the field, the mighty cheers for him
Showed how their hopes of victory were all bound up in Tim!

It was but yesterday he bore the laurels on his brow,
But who, alas! is there so low to do him honor now?
His heart swells, bursting in his chest;
the heart so bruised and sore;
Could he but go back on the field and pitch that game once more!
The tears fall from his eyes like rain, the hot and angry tears,
No sorrow has he known like this in all his fifteen years;
How will he meet the Tigers now? How look into the eyes
Of those who staked their all on him and saw him lose the prize?

To school he walks secluded ways where once with pride he strode,
With awestruck youngsters all about, the middle of the road;
Far from the madding crowd he stands upon the playground there
His honors fallen like the leaves in Autumn's frosty air;
A humble Tiger is he now, and small boys pass him by
With cruel sneers where once he heard the cheers ring shrill and high;
And Reddy Blake, the Cyclone Curve, is pitcher for the team,
While he's but th' somnambulist of a quickly vanished dream!

THINK TAFT WILL AID IMMIGRATION PLAN

Jews Seeking to Divert Movement Toward Big Cities Encouraged by Ellis Island Visit.

WOULD POPULATE THE WEST

Strict Interpretation of the Immigration Laws, Which Threatened the Plan, Expected to be Relaxed.

As a result of President Taft's visit to Ellis Island a few days ago and his pronouncement in favor of encouraging the diverting of immigration from New York to other prts, a strong impetus has been given to the project, supported by several leading Jews of this city, to divert to the Gulf cities and the territory of the West, Southwest, and Northwest the stream of Jewish immigration from Russia and the East. The movement to deflect Jewish immigration to the Port of Galveston instead of Eastern seaports, which was started several years ago, was brought practically to a standstill by a sudden rigorous enforcement of the provisions of the exclusion laws last June, but has taken new life since President Taft's official announcement of sympathy with its aims, and it is now expected that a nucleus of 20,000 Jews can be settled in the wide territory west of the Mississippi in a short time, and that the influence of those settling amid the greater opportunities of that section will be strong enough materially to lessen the flood of immigration to the already congested settlements of the Middle and North Atlantic seaports.

Dangers of Congestion Here.

The danger of adding to the evils of congestion in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore by an unchecked stream of immigration to these cities was pointed out by ex-Commissioner of Immigration Sargent three or four years ago, and it was as a result of his representations that the movement was started by philanthropic endowment to establish an agency at Galveston with the purpose of diverting and distributing immigration there. Galveston was selected because, in the first place, it was far enough removed to make unlikely the gravitation and drift of immigrants from there to the crowded cities of the East, and also because its excellent railroad facilities would lay open to the newcomers the vast territory from the Mississippi to the Pacific Coast and from the Gulf to the Canadian border.

An organization, known as the Jewish Immigrants' Information Bureau, was established there to take charge of the immigrants after their arrival, to provide them immediately with railroad fare to their destined places of settlement in the West, Southwest, and Northwest, and to maintain them through local volunteer committees until they should find suitable employment. The Galveston committee was in charge of Jacob H. Schiff, Chairman, who contributed $500,000 for the work; Cyrus L. Sulzberger, President of the United Hebrew Charities; Rubin Arkush, President of the Industrial Removal Society; David M. Bressler, Director of the same society; Morris D. Waldman, Superintendent of the United Hebrew Charities; Prof. Morris Loeb, Justice Nathan Bijur, and Max J. Kohler.

To supply the immigrant in the European countries with information concerning the advantages of the Southwest, Northwest, and West over the congested Middle and North Atlantic cities, the Jewish Territorial Organization, a European philanthropic organization, of which Israel Zangwill is Chairman, volunteered to co-operate in Russia with the Galveston organization.

The movement began well, the men supporting it feeling that the Government by a free and liberal interpretation of the immigration laws would do what it could to help, and thus in a measure offset the unwillingness of the immigrants to seek the longer and more expensive route to the United States. It received a temporary setback by the panic of 1907 and 1908, but resumed operations very actively after the panic, with the result that some 2,500 immigrants were diverted to Galveston, who would otherwise have landed, and in probability settled, in New York or other Atlantic seaports. As far as practicable it was attempted to distribute only men immigrants in the Southern and Western territory, leaving their families to be brought over later when the men became self-supporting.

Law Checks Immigration.

Then, suddenly, in the absence of Secretary Nagel of the Department of Commerce and Labor, came what seemed to be a sudden change of policy on the part of the department, and Assistant Secretary B. S. Cable gave notice that thereafter immigrants at Galveston would be subjected to a rigorous examination and the full force of the law applied in each case. Of one shipment of 250 an attempt was made to exclude eighty-four, one-third of the entire number. After vigorous protests from the officials of the organization, however, who said that needless obstacles were being thrown in the way of the movement, only twenty-seven were excluded, on the ground that they were liable to become public charges. There was some talk also of a possible violation of the contract labor clause of the immigration laws, but the Galveston committee pointed out that no contract whatsoever was made with the immigrants, that in no instance was an attempt made to displace strikers, or assure the immigrant of employment in any definite industry, and that no fee or return was sought either from the employer or employe.

The work, it was explained, was philanthropic and merely duplicated that of the Industrial Removal Society. It was maintained that it had been virtually declared to be legal in the opinions of court expressed concerning the importation of Flemish weavers by the State of South Carolina and by the authorization by Congress of just such agencies at the Ellis Island Immigration Station. Nor, it was shown, could the immigrant so landed be considered in danger of becoming a public charge, since the Galveston bureau itself was established with the very purpose of immediately dispatching him to his destination and maintaining him until he became self-supporting.

Nevertheless, the immediate consequence of this show of somewhat restrictionist tendencies at the Galveston station so discouraged immigration from European ports to Galveston that, being at the time merely in its infancy, the movement was nearly crushed, and the organization practically ceased operations.

Since then, it is understood, representations have been made to the Administration by the men back of the movement, showing the benefit of such distribution, as it aims at, alike to the congested centres from which the immigrants are diverted, the Western territory in which they are distributed, and which they help develop, and the immigrants themselves in the freer and less crowded fields of work. The pronouncement of President Taft in favor of the movement is taken by the members of the organization to show that the Government will now facilitate, in so far as it can by a liberal interpretation of the law and an attitude of encouragement, the work of the organization in diverting the flow of immigration to Galveston and the territory it gives upon.

One steamship line has already in operation a direct line of ships from Bremen to Galveston, and some time ago Congress voted an appropriation for the building of an immigration station there. These circumstances, together with Government encouragement believed to have been expressed by President Taft a few days ago, are expected greatly to stimulate the movement.

Jacob H. Schiff, in a recent talk to the Young Men's Hebrew Association of this city, came out strongly in favor of such deflection of immigration.

"I wish I could take every one of our persecuted people out of Russia and bring them to the United States," he said. "But I would be a bad citizen if I asked them to stay in New York. This country has room for two or three million more Jews. We want them to come. But we want to facilitate their going away from New York."

TWO CLASSES MARRY IN BARNARD THEATRE

Real Wedding Even to a Perfectly Sweet Bridegroom and Fetching Choir Boys.

1912 WAS UNITED TO 1914

The Male Garments Were Borrowed but Satisfactory, and There Was a Real Wedding Present.

They had a real wedding in the Brinckerhoff Theatre up at Barnard yesterday afternoon, but it was a very select affair. It was kept such a secret, in fact, that the fashionable wedding crowd didn't have a chance to gather around the doors, steal the flowers, and bother the policemen. As far as that goes, there weren't any policemen, these being the only masculine characters at a big wedding that the Barnard girls didn't portray. The girls not only furnished the bride and bridesmaids but the bridegroom, best man, ushers, and even the minister and the dearest of little choir boys in cottas and cassocks. The real thing, the cottas were, if not the boys.

Barnard, in its serious study of the isms, is not given to such frivolity as weddings. This is the second that has been held within its studious walls. It was a class wedding, the class of 1912—in the person of Miss Cora Thees, President of the junior class—being wedded to 1914—Miss Margaret Brittain, President of the freshman class. It was a real wedding as far as a bride in a wonderful veil and a bridegroom in conventional evening clothes (borrowed from an amiable male relative) could make it.

The Barnard College classes match up according to numbers—the odds and the evens together. That makes 1914 the sister class of 1912. When 1912 arrived at the college, being a baby freshman, it had to have a party, or something, to make it feel happy and at home. So the wedding celebration yesterday might have been called a birthday party. The last wedding was when 1912 gave a similar celebration and wedded 1910.

Yesterday's festivities, however, were quite the best, every one said, for the last wedding one goes to is always the best, and the last bride the prettiest ever. It was a great celebration, and the fathers, brothers, and cousins never would have known their best party clothes if they had seen them waiting at the church, which, yesterday, was the Barnard College theatre where the celebration was held. Not a real man, however, was allowed within yards of the college.

It was 4 o'clock when the first notes of the wedding march were struck by the orchestra, (Miss Rosalind Case at the piano,) and the little choir boys (the Misses Eleanore Myers, Edith Morris, and Ernestine Isabel) heading the wedding procession sang joyously.

Hark, we're coming, coming slowly to the mystic site;
Greet us with delight;
You will find that we're all right.
In marrying different classes
We are truly out of sight.
'14's lover true, come to marry you,
Class 1-9-1-2.

Following came the wedding party, the bride in white, her face modestly hidden by the wedding veil—which was the real thing, and no imitation, every thread of it cheese cloth. This was one time when the bridegroom attracted as much attention as the bride. All the Barnard girls, who were there as guests, said he was the nicest ever and the handsomest bridegroom they had ever seen. The bridesmaids, in lovely shades of pale green cheese cloth, were Miss Dorothy Fitch, Miss Winifred Borgehold, and the Misses Ross and Morgan. There were two more nice boys for pages, the Misses Margaret Southerton and Pauline Kahn, who carried the bride's train, and two pretty flower girls, who threw flowers in the path of the newly married couple, were the Misses Sophie Andrews and Edna Hess.

There were also fond parents, who, from the frequent use of the handkerchief, evidently shed tears copiously. The mother and father of the bride were the Misses Kelly and Higgins and the parents of the bridegroom were the Misses Lucile Weil and Lillie E. Stein. The groomsman and ushers, each with a white carnation in his buttonhole, were Miss Eelanor Doty—who assisted the bridegroom so well that there was no lost ring or other wedding tragedy—and the Misses Margaret Wood, Isabel Koss, Cornelia Dakin, Bertha Junghans, and Grace Fisher. Every one said that the priest, Miss Mildred Hamburger, was wonderful, and that there was great originality in the ceremony.

After a warm kiss of affection between the newly married pair, which excited the risibilities of the wedding guests, the wedding procession marched off the stage, while the choir boys chanted:

Hark, we're going slowly from the groom and bride,
Alma mater's pride;
You can search both far and wide
To find such jewels, side by side,
As '12 and '14 here.
'Neath the white and blue.
Lovers fond and true.
Hear us sing and cheer.

There was just one wedding present, a blue and white college banner with '12 and '14 on it, presented by the freshmen to the juniors. The young couple received congratulations from a few of their friends, but it would have taken too long to have received all the college girls who crowded the theatre, and every one was anxious to dance and to see if the masculine members of the party would do credit to their unaccustomed wearing apparel. So every one danced, and there was a wedding feast, but that was an ordinary college spread with no bridal features.

SARAH BERNHARDT SAILS FOR NEW YORK

Actress Was Shocked by Bomb That Exploded Near Her Window During the Strike.

"JUDAS" IN HER REPERTOIRE

Will Present Play by American Author, John De Kay—Learning English to Express Admiration for Americans.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Oct. 21.—Sarah Bernhardt and her company sailed to-day on La Provence from Havre. Just before leaving Paris the great actress signed the following statement for THE NEW YORK TIMES:

"Yes, it is true that the bomb that was intended by anarchistic sympathizers with the railway strikers to destroy the house of Maussard, Municipal Councilor, on the Boulevard Pereire, greatly shocked me. It exploded close to my library window, but aside from breaking the glass in a few picture frames, did me no damage. It was at 1 o'clock at night. I had just returned by motor from London.

"In addition to my regular repertoire I shall produce in America "La Beffa," "La Samaritaine," "Proces de Jeanne d'Arc," "Le Bouffon," "La Femme X.," "Le Bois Sacre," "Les Romanesque," and last, but not least, a really remarkable play by an American author, John De Kay. It is entitled "Judas," and deals in an entirely original way with one of the greatest dramas enacted on the actual stage of life. It presents a Judas hitherto unknown to literature. I shall play the title role. The piece will be magnificently staged. The scenery and costumes have been designed by the best artists in Paris, and special music is being written for it by a famous composer.

"I am looking forward with keen pleasure to my tour in America, where I am always so generously received. The people of America, as well as the English people, have placed me in a permanent debt of gratitude. I am devoting all my spare time to learning English in order that I may express to them in their own language something of the admiration I have always felt for them and their institutions. The American audiences exhilarate me. They are very keen on what's best in every form of musical and dramatic art.

"SARAH BERNHARDT."

The four hundredth performance of "Seven Days" was celebrated at the Astor Theatre last night, not with souvenirs to the audience, but with gifts to the players who have been with the company so long. The women received flowers and boxes of gloves, and each of the men found a smoking set in his dressing room, the gifts of Wagenhals & Kemper. "Seven Days" will leave the Astor Theatre to-night to go to Boston for an indefinite run.

Charles Zug.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Penn., Oct. 21.—Charles Zug, President of Zug & Co., a steel man of millions, died very suddenly at his home, 3,407 Fifth Avenue, to-day. Mr. Zug, who was 78 years of age, and who took an active interest in the management of his mills, worked up until last night. Mr. Zug was the last of the old guard of iron and steel men who held out against combining with the United States Steel Corporation. He was a lifelong friend of Andrew Carnegie, but he disagreed with Mr. Carnegie on the question of consolidation. His refusal to join the steel combination was quite costly to the Zug interests, which did not have ore beds of their own, nor facilities for getting the ore from the lakes. It has been estimated that Mr. Zug's iron and steel interests paid out $1,000,000 since the trust was formed to preserve its individuality, but for all that his mills were among the best paying in the country. Mrs. William Wherry of Plainfield, N. J., is a daughter of the dead steel man.

SOCIETY THRONG AT CHARITY BALL

Brilliant Festivities at Benefit for Nassau Hospital in Agriculture Building.

SUPPER SERVED IN TENT

Many House Parties for Event Held on Eve of the Aviation Meet at Belmont Park.

Special to The New York Times.

MINEOLA, L. I., Oct. 21.—The Charity dance given here to-night, the eve of the international aviation meet at Belmont Park, was a brilliant affair. Every country seat in this part of the island sheltered a house party for over the first week end of the meet, and the ball in aid of the Nassau Hospital was a fitting ceremony with which to open the series of festivities about to follow.

Despite the fact that the rough board buildings of the Queens-Nassau Agricultural Society were utilized for the dance, the interior was transformed and gave no suggestion of the splintered partitions which form the background of school exhibits and fancy work during the County Fair.

The entire side was draped with white and Autumn leaves and potted ferns were used for decoration. Berger furnished the music and the supper, and a darkey orchestra was also provided for ragtime music and songs. Supper was served in a tent connected with the main room by an awning. The dance was attended by 800 people, who came from all parts of the island, including Roslyn, Westbury, Cedarhurst, East Williston, Hempstead, Garden City, and Glen Cove.

The committee in charge of the affair, and upon whom the responsibility of its success rested, were Mrs. August Belmont, Mrs. J. Searle Barclay, Mrs. Oliver W. Bird, Mrs. W. Crittenden Adams, Mrs. J. A. Albertson, Mrs. M. Baldwin, Mrs. Lloyd Brice, Mrs. James A. Burden, Mrs. Arthur Scott Burden, Mrs. Middleton S. Burrill, Mrs. Sidney Dillon Ripley, Mrs. Charles Steele, Miss Atala Thayer, Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, Miss Dorothy Whitney, Mrs. Payne Whitney, Mrs. H. Van Rensselaer Kennedy, Mrs. Adolf Ladenburg, Mrs. P. W. Livermore, Mrs. Charles B. MacDonald, Mrs. Edwin D. Morgan, Mrs. H. L. Pratt, Mrs. Ralph Pulitzer, and Mrs. Robert Bacon.

A combination of too much Mathewson, Larry Doyle's bat, and some loose fielding by the Yankees gave the Giants the championship of Manhattan at the Polo Grounds yesterday in the seventh clash between the cohorts of John McGraw and Hal Chase. The victory was the fourth the Giants have enjoyed over the Yankees, and it served to end the post-season series as well as a most successful season at the two local parks. The score was 6 to 3, but the game could not be considered as safely tucked away for the Giants until Christy Mathewson had grabbed a drive from Hemphill's bat and had thrown to Merkle for the last out in the Yankees' half of the ninth inning.

The postponed game of Thursday had given Mathewson a chance to rest up enough for another turn in the box, and did not let the opportunity slip away. Matty had already figured in the three victories of the National Leaguers, and it had been clearly demonstrated that he was the only pitcher on whom McGraw could rely to defeat the Hilltoppers. To safeguard against a Yankee victory, which would put the question at issue up to one deciding game, the Giants' leader named "Big Six" to end the series yesterday, and he made good. He was hit harder than in any of the previous games, but he was always master of the situation, and but for an error by Doyle in the seventh inning Chase's men would have been held to a single run.

Doyle's Homer Scores Three Runs.

While Matty was holding the Hilltoppers down the Giants were going up. Of the half dozen runs scored by the National Leaguers, Larry Doyle was responsible for three, and poor playing by the Yankees contributed an equal number. Larry did his little bit in the third inning, after the Yankees had gained a one-run lead, and the Giants never lost the advantage. Larry found Meyers on third base and Mathewson on second when he faced Warhop in the third inning, and he promptly spanked one of Jack's underhand twisters into the upper section of the right field grand stand. Meyers and Matty clung close to the cushions until the ball rested among the seats, as the drive went high into the air and Hemphill hustled to the stands as if to catch it. Meyers walked in and Doyle overtook Matty between second and third bases, the pair finishing the distance about six feet apart. Errors by Roach and Chase, with a little slow work by the Yankee leaders, which does not break into the box score, added the three remaining runs which the Giants scored.

It was confidently expected that Ford would begin the game for the Yankees, as he had not worked since the tie game on the hilltop Monday, and there were groans of disappointment among Yankee rooters when it was announced that Jack Warhop was the moundsman to oppose Mathewson. Warhop pitched four innings, and then gave way to the Yankee star, who pitched shut-out ball during his term on the rubber. Jack got away to a good start, and allowed only three runs during his four innings, but one of the bingles was the home-run drive by Doyle which caused quite a little uneasiness in the Yankee camp. Warhop's weakness was in his control, and he earned his exit by walking one Giant and hitting three more, rather than because he was being found to any extent by the Giant swatsmiths. Manager Chase evidently figured that his only hope lay in holding the Giants down to the three runs scored on Doyle's wallop and Warhop, with poor control, was not the man. Ford was reached for five hits during his four innings, and but for errors would not have been scored on.

Details of the Playing.

Wolter, the first Yankee to face Matty, beat out a slow hit toward third base, Hemphill flied to Murray, and Wolter registered a clean steal on Meyers. He reached third base while Devlin was throwing Chase out, and was left there, while Knight was going out on a drive to Bridwell. With two down in the Giants' half Becker walked and stole and Murray fanned. Cree reached third base in the second inning on Bridwell's error, Roach's sacrifice, and Criger's infield out. Warhop ended the inning by striking out. The Giants went down in order in their half. In the third inning Austin scratched a hit past Mathewson and reached second base when Wolter lined over Matty's head. Hemphill's sacrifice advanced both runners and Austin was thrown out at the plate trying to score on Chase's grounder to Devlin. Knight singled to right field and Wolter scored. Meyers grabbed Cree's short roller and ended the rally.

Then the Giants shot ahead. Meyers hit a terrific liner which bounded off Austin's shins and rolled to Knight. Mathewson was hit and Devore advanced both runners with a sacrifice. Doyle hit into the right field bleachers for a home run, scoring three runs. Murray was also hit in this inning and he stole second, but was left. Warhop singled to left field with two down in the fourth inning and Austin fanned. In the Giants' half, after two had gone out, Meyers was hit and Matty singled to right field, putting Chase on third base. Devore hit to Austin and Matty was forced at second base.

Ford Goes Into the Box.

The Yankees went out in order in the fifth. Ford and Mitchell were in the points for the Yankees when the Giants' half began. Doyle singled past second base, and after being caught napping off first base, made second safely on some slow work by Chase, who followed Larry down the base line and threw late and poorly to Knight. Becker fanned, Doyle made a clean steal of third base, and Snodgrass, who had succeeded Murray, walked. On an attempted double steal Mitchell's throw checked Snodgrass, but Roach threw to the stands trying to get Doyle at third and Larry scored, Snodgrass reaching third. He scored on Bridwell's hit to right field, which rolled through Hemphill and gave Al three bases.

In the sixth and eighth innings neither team saw first base, but both scored in the seventh. After the Yankees had been retired Doyle fumbled Austin's grounder and Wolter hit safely past short. Hemphill hit along the right field line and the ball stopped under the automobile owned by John T. Brush on foul ground at the end of the foul line. Hemphill made the circuit behind Austin and Wolter, but was sent back to second and Wolter to third, a ground rule having been made, allowing two bases on such a hit. A wild pitch scored Wolter and put Hemphill on third base. Chase struck out. Becker's scratch hit, Chase's error, and Devlin's scratch hit gave the Giants their last run in the seventh inning. With one Yankee out in the ninth inning Daniels, who batted for Ford, singled to left field and Austin beat out a bunt. Wolter's sacrifice advanced the two runners and Hemphill ended the game with a short drive which Mathewson grabbed for an out at first base.

GIANTS GET $1,110.62 EACH.

Total Paid Attendance for Seven Local Games Reached 103,033.

The paid attendance at the Polo Grounds yesterday, where the Giants and Yankees played the seventh and deciding game of their inter-league series, was the smallest of the series. Only 4,439 paid to see the championship decided, and the receipts were $3,433. Only one of the first five games failed to show a bigger attendance than the combined figures of the last two games. That was the second contest, played at American League Park on Friday, Oct. 14. Each of the other games shows a much better crowd than the last two combined. Bad weather kept down attendance yesterday, but the interest in the series has been decidedly on the wane since Tuesday.

The total paid attendance for the seven games was 103,033, and the total receipts were $81,462.50. Of this amount the players will receive $38,871.88, and this amount will be subdivided at the rate of 60 per cent. to the winning team and 40 per cent. to the losers. The Giants share of the purse is $23,323.13, and as there are twenty-one players to figure in the money, each Giant will receive $1,110.62. The Yankees will split up $15,548.75 among twenty-two players, each Yankee getting $706.46. The tie game played at American League Park last Monday added $190.29 to the share of each of the Giants, and each Yankee profited to the extent of $120.79, as the fifth game added a total of $6,663.40 to the players' share of the receipts. The club owners will divide $34,444.37, and the National Commission will get $8,146.25, or 10 per cent. of the total receipts. The series was the most successful from a financial standpoint ever played by two teams, not pennant winners, and the players will receive more than in some series between pennant-winning teams.

OVERALL TO QUIT PITCHING.

Chicago Player Declares He Is Tired of That Part of Baseball.

CHICAGO, Oct. 21.—Orval Overall, who has been one of the Chicago National's star pitchers for several seasons, announces that he has pitched his last big league game.

"I don't mean that I won't work again in this series," said Overall. "I will if Chance asks me to, but I won't be a pitcher on the Cub team or any other club next year, and I am in earnest when I say so. I am not going to quit because of anything that has happened in this series or at any time this season. I am just tired of the job, and I don't want any more of it.

"The life of a big league pitcher is unsatisfactory at best. If you are good you get along all right and no one has any complaint to make. But if you are bad, even for a little while, or if your arm goes back on you, you are up against it and you can't help yourself.

"I like baseball, and would be glad to play any other position. If some one will try me as an outfielder, a catcher, or a first baseman, I may decide to stick to the game a while longer. I think I could make good in one of these positions, and I would like the opportunity of trying. But I am tired of pitching, and I will be all through with that part of it as soon as this series is at an end."

Giants to Play All Stars Two Games.

Those persons who failed to see the Giants in action in the local post-season series in which they defeated the Yankees, thereby winning the title of champions of Manhattan, will have their last chance to-day and to-morrow. The McGrawites will play two games at Olympic Field before the curtain is finally rung down. To-day and to-morrow they will clash with the All-Star aggregation, and it is expected they will have a hard tussle with their opponents.

"Dixie Kid" to Fight Unbeaten Sailor.

Manager Buckley has arranged a match for the Sharkey A. C. entertainment on next Wednesday night that should result in a smashing encounter. The principals will be Denis Tighe of Scranton, Penn., a product of the United States Navy, and considered to be one of the best welterweights in Pennsylvania, and the "Dixie Kid." A year ago, while still in the navy, Tighe boxed another sailor, Jim Jeffries being the referee, and Tighe won what was regarded as the navy championship of California. He has never appeared in the ring in this city, but has boxed a number of times up the State. In his last bout two weeks ago he beat Harry Mansfield, and just before that gained a decision over Mike (Twin) Sullivan.

This will be "Dixie Kid's" first battle since his defeat at the hands of Dick Nelson, which he attributed to the fact that he met Nelson too soon after he beat Willie Lewis. The Kid now is in good shape, and he and Tighe should furnish an interesting battle.

RAIN HELPS CUBS' CHANCES OF VICTORY

Fielder Jones Says That Athletics Will Lose Their Form and Cubs Need the Rest.

CHICAGO'S PITCHING POOR

Chance's Men Not Running Around the Bases as They Did Against the Detroit Club—Cubs' Defense Weak.

BY FIELDER JONES,
Former Manager Chicago Americans.
Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, OCT. 21.—The weather conditions that caused the postponement of to-day's game between the Athletics and Cubs was an advantage to Chance's club, which needs all kinds of advantages now, and a detriment to the Athletics, who have so big a lead in the world's series that they have ceased to worry about the outcome.

The Cubs have been losing and a day off gives them a chance to pull themselves together. The Athletics have been going at their fastest speed and a lay-off cannot do them any good, while it may do them harm. When a club is playing its best ball, its manager usually is praying that rain will stay away so that the team will not have a chance to fall out of its stride. The news that the game to-day had been called off should be cheering to Chicagoans for that reason and for at least one other. The Athletics have shown to great advantage on a dry field. They would have been compelled to show their worth on a wet one to-day. I don't believe they would look so good under such conditions because their principal strength, outside their pitching, lies in their speed, particularly that of their infield.

Furthermore, if it had been possible to play here to-day the Cubs, if they had won, would have been compelled to travel back to Philadelphia for to-morrow's game. To be sure, after they had won, the count would have been three to one against them instead of three to nothing, but I figure that in two games at home, they have more of a chance to win both of them than they would have playing one game here and one in Philadelphia. If the Cubs win here to-morrow they will have the advantage on grounds Sunday, and this advantage is one that should not be passed over lightly.

Poor Pitching of Cubs.

In looking over the games played to date several reasons for the defeat of the Cubs may be given. The worst thing about Chance's team has been the pitching. It doesn't take an expert to see that. The pitching has not only been ineffective mechanically, but it also has lacked intelligence. I cannot tell whether this is the fault of the Cub pitchers or of their catchers. Everybody who knows baseball and who has seen the Athletics play must know that Mack's batters hit the ball in all directions. The Cub infield and outfield evidently have been playing their positions with reference to what they heard about the Philadelphia batters before the series started. This would be all right if the Chicago pitchers would prove harder to hit. As it has turned out, I think they would do better to pick their places without much regard for the batters and work the pitchers to send certain balls that could be hit ordinarily to certain places only. Instead of that the Chicago pitchers, without much of anything, have been trying to outguess and fool the Athletics, and the result is that they have been hit hard all over the field.

In the series of 1907 and 1908 the Detroit Tigers declared they were beaten by the Cubs because the catchers were powerless to stop the baserunning of Chance's team. In the present series the Cubs haven't done any baserunning. Thomas might have stopped them if they had, but you can't tell, because the Cubs haven't done the work on the paths that they did against Detroit. They haven't tried to do it either.

Cubs Took Few Chances on Bases.

It seems to me that the Cubs should have scored more runs than they did in the games Coombs has pitched. At that, the runs they did score—eight in the two games—would have been enough if they themselves had good pitching. But the Tuesday game in Philadelphia will bring out my point. Through his own weakness in that contest Coombs allowed nineteen Cubs to get to first base. The Cubs scored three runs. Fourteen of Chance's men were left on bases. If they had run the bases as they did against Detroit they might have scored enough runs to win that game. We don't know whether or not Thomas would have stopped them. They didn't give him much of a chance to show. But when a pitcher alone is responsible for the fact that nineteen batsmen get to first base it looks to me as if it was the opposing team's fault if it doesn't cross the plate more than three times.

As for the game here, the Cubs scored five runs, for which Coombs was mostly responsible. Five runs should win any ball game, especially a world's series ball game, in which a club's best pitchers are supposed to be working at their best. I am not saying that the Cubs shouldn't have scored more runs themselves, but five would have been sufficient with strong defense behind them. But the defense was lacking. In other words, Chance's pitchers and infielders were not as good as Coombs and his support.

Bender Almost a Team Himself.

As for the first game, the game Bender pitched, there was nothing to it. The Cubs didn't have a chance to win. Bender pitched a game that made the work of his supporters easy. He didn't depend on them and they didn't have to. He was good enough to stop any ball club, and the only way the Cubs could have beaten him was to have their pitcher hold the Athletics runless.

Too much credit cannot be given to Connie Mack's infield for the showing it has made so far. "Gingered up" by the work of the youngsters, Collins, Barry, and Baker, the veteran Harry Davis has played the game of his life. With him working at that clip, the Athletics' infielders have appeared to outclass the Cubs, the latter being handicapped by the ineffectiveness of the Chicago pitchers.

Aside from the play of the infield and the team's terrific hitting, the real feature of the series to date has been the catching of Ira Thomas. Ira has proved the right man in the right place, and has fooled most of the critics by using his head as well as arm to advantage. He has shown great judgment in guessing the Cubs' batters, and helped Coombs immeasurably in the two games Jack pitched. In the outfield it is a different story. Murphy is a great ball player, and has shown it all the way through. Lord and Strunk have not played up to the standard of other big league outfielders and have not looked good enough to be regular members of a championship club. They have not had a chance to act as important factors in any of the three games because none of the games has been close, so it is impossible to tell what they wolud do in a pinch. But on form the Cubs outfielders outclass their rivals and would strengthen the Philadelphia Club if they were on it. The rest of Mack's men have loomed up as worthy of places on a championship club.

Bender, who is likely to work for the Athletics to-morrow, has pitched great ball in cold weather and should go well. It is Chance's plan to use Cole or Brown. If either of these men can stop Mack's sluggers the Cubs will have a chance to win the game. Bender pitched an exhibition game against a team of Cubs on the West Side grounds when it was cold last Fall. He held them to two hits and shut them out. If he can repeat that performance it will be all off with the National League champions. If the Cubs win to-day the teams will play here again on Sunday, and if the Cubs win on Sunday the clubs will go to Philadelphia on Monday and play on Tuesday. This is improbable.

Mantell and Smith at Fairmont A. C.

After next Tuesday night Jim Smith of the Bronx will know whether he has a chance for the middleweight fistic title. He is to meet Frank Mantell at the Fairmont A. C., and if he can get the verdict over the hard-hitting and clever man from Pawtucket, R. I., he will be considered when the experts try to name a successor to Stanley Ketchel. Smith is training at Cannon's roadhouse under the direction of Jimmy Johnson. Two good boxers are working with him, as Smith must brush up in this department of the game. He can hit as hard as a heavyweight, but must also learn how to avoid a punch. Smith won his spurs when he fought Ketchel last Summer. Ketchel won, but it was a hard battle. Later Smith put up a good ten-round fight with Joe Jeannette, who was twenty pounds the heavier. Mantell's record is very good. He won over Jack (Twin) Sullivan, and also whipped Frank Klaus, the man whom many experts believe would have beaten Ketchel last Spring if it had not been for an attack of stage fright.

Manual Training Against Poly To-day.

Brooklyn schoolboys are much interested over the football game between the Manual Training High School team and "Poly Prep's" representatives at Commercial Field, Albany Avenue and Lincoln Road, this afternoon. The game, it is expected, will determine whether Poly will be a contender for the "city championship." It will also enable football followers in scholastic circles to see the Manual team in action against a respected rival for honors on the gridiron.

JOHNSON SURE HE WILL WIN.

Negro Confident That He Can Drive Faster Than Oldfield To-day.

Barney Oldfield and Jack Johnson, heavyweight pugilist, will meet this afternoon at the Sheepshead Bay race track in their match race postponed from Thursday on account of rain. The track was benefited by the downpour. The surface is much harder and firmer, and neither the spectators nor the drivers will be troubled with dust. Both drivers complained of this in their practice earlier in the week.

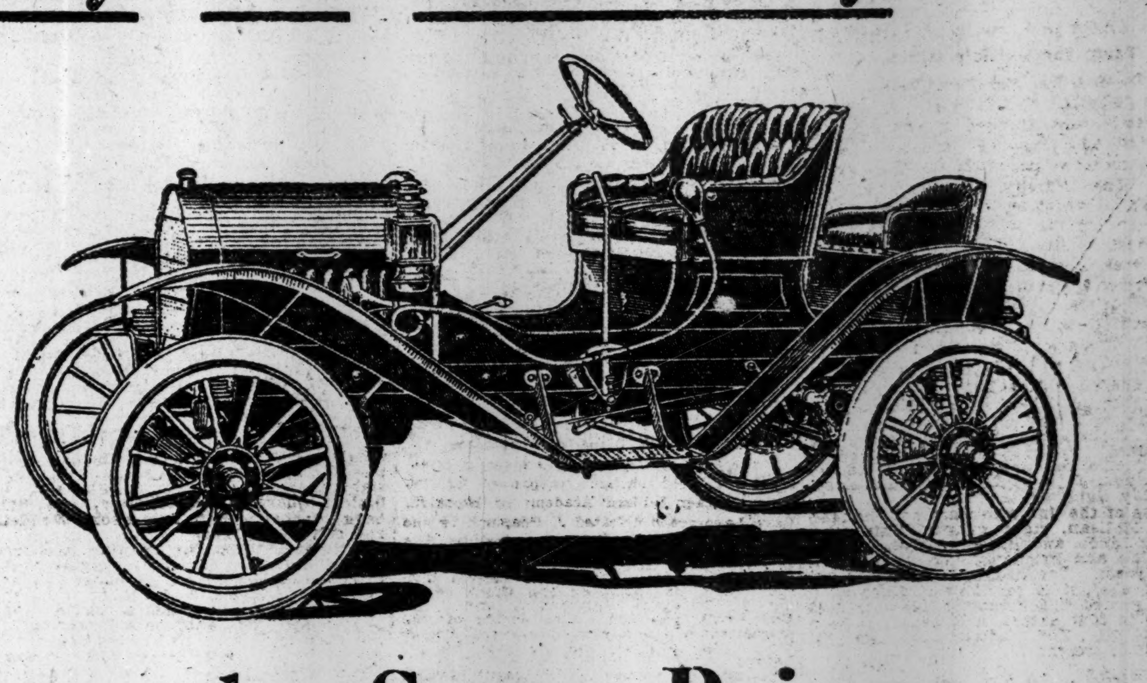
The meeting of the two has aroused much feeling in sporting and automobile circles. For announcing that he would race against Johnson, Oldfield was suspended by the American Automobile Association, and Barney says that he will fight the organization to the last ditch to sustain his contention that a professional athlete should be permitted to earn his livelihood regardless of resolutions passed by "governors of the sport."

Track Supt. Clarke stated last night that the famous old course is lightning fast, and Oldfield has agreed to drive his "Blitzen" Benz a couple of exhibition miles against the record.

Johnson is confident and firmly believes that he will win from Oldfield as he did from Jeffries at Reno. "They thought I was kidding when I said I would race and defeat Oldfield," said Johnson yesterday, "and they did not take notice of me until I put my money up and told Oldfield he would have to race me some day just as public opinion forced Jeffries to fight me. I am going to win at Sheepshead Bay track or run through the fence trying."

The match race will be best two out of three heats of five miles each. The men will draw for positions just before the start. George Considine will referee the contest, while Senator Timothy D. Sullivan will act as starter. Kid McCoy, Tom Sharkey, Dave Montgomery, and Frank Browne are the judges. The first heat will start at 2:30 o'clock.

Model E Brush Runabout
Now Ready for Delivery
Everyman's Car
$485.00 F.O.B. Factory
Rumble Seat and Tool Box $20.00 Extra



A Better Car—the Same Price

THIS new Brush model is built on the same fundamental principles as former Brush cars—on the same fundamental principles that will underlie all future Brush cars—on the same fundamental principles that have made it EVERYMAN'S CAR.

There are refinements and improvements in the Model E which will increase the efficiency of the car and make it more than ever deserving of the great reputation the Brush enjoys among 10,000 owners all over the world.

These improvements are few, and not one of them is radical in any way. They are simply the result of a careful study of the car and of the user's requirements.

When we designed and built the first Brush, we were not aiming to make a car that would sell because it was different and low in price. We foresaw the demand for a small, dependable automobile that would provide a quicker, easier and cheaper means of transportation for the thousands who were using horse-drawn vehicles and the street cars in the performance of their duties.

True, the initial cost of the Brush is low. Please do not judge the car by its price, but rather by what it is doing every day for 10,000 users; judge it by the practical, sensible features of its construction; judge it by its looks; judge it by the wonderful showing it has made in economy, hill-climbing and endurance contests.

The Brush has always shown well in trials where simplicity, economy and dependability counted, but during the past year some of its performances have been truly wonderful.

For example, we cite the trip of the

"Abernathy Kids"

You remember the boys who rode bronchos from their father's ranch in Oklahoma to New York to meet Colonel Roosevelt and take part in the now famous Roosevelt parade. These same boys, Louie and Temple, 9 and 6 years old respectively, drove a Brush Runabout back to Oklahoma, after only three lessons. Louie drove most of the journey, as Temple was not tall enough to reach the control pedal.

The father of the boys chose a Brush for them, because he found after a careful investigation that the Brush was the only car they could start and handle without help, and because it was so simple mechanically they could understand everything about it. Thousands realize this since reading about the trip and seeing this 9-year old boy driving.

In the Munsey Historic Tour, the principal endurance contest of the East in 1910, the Brush finished with a perfect score and won the trophy in its class. The route covered 1550 miles over all kinds of roads, from the boulevards of New Jersey to the rough mountain roads of Pennsylvania.

Thousands of experienced motorists watched the Brush travel on even terms with the big cars on a schedule designed for big car power and big car stability. They saw it come through with a perfect score under conditions that put several big cars out of the running. They saw it prove its dependability in a way no one could doubt.

These two achievements of the Brush are of vital importance to the prospective motor car buyer. The former shows superlative simplicity, each shows dependability.

If you use any mode of transportation you will be doing yourself an injustice if you do not investigate the Brush. Let us tell you what it is doing for merchants, physicians, salesmen, collectors, architects, contractors, farmers, R. F. D. carriers, artisans—in fact, for people in all walks of life—people whose annual income varies from $1000 to $25,000. Let us show you what the Brush will do for you.

If there is no Brush Dealer in your locality, let us show you how you can make money selling EVERYMAN'S CAR.

INDIANS WILL TRY OUT TIGERS TO-DAY

Yale Brushed Up for Battle with Vanderbilt University Eleven.

There is no promise of any serious upset on the football menu to-day, although the so-called big teams in some instances have to fight for all they get. Yale, Harvard, Princeton and Pennsylvania, once heralded as the "Big Four," but in late years not always entitled to such a mark of distinction, have formidable opponents, but these teams are not likely to cause such an upheaval in the football world as West Point did last Saturday, when Yale was trounced.

The most attractive number on to-day's programme will probably be the invasion of the Carlisle Indians at Princeton. The Redskins are always an uncertain proposition, but they have shown nothing surprising thus far this season. Both the Tigers and the Indians have met Villanova, and the Indians won by a 6 to 0 score. Princeton overwhelmed the same team by a 36 to 0 score. The tiger line-up will have Capt. Eddie Hart at tackle instead of at fullback. Coach Roper made the change this week to strengthen the defensive work of the line, and at the same time to put a more speedy man than Hart in the backfield. Hart played at tackle in his preparatory school days at Exetor, and his presence on the line is calculated to make an improvement in the defensive work of the team.

Things have been stirring in New Haven since the team came back from West Point last week, in the gloom of defeat. There have been some lively sessions with the scrubs under the instruction of the score of graduate coaches. Little is known about the Vanderbilt team that visits Yale to-day. Two years ago, however, this team under a system of coaching devised by Coach Yost of Michigan won the Southern championship, and is one of the strongest teams among the Southern colleges.

Harvard should have no trouble disposing of Brown, as the Providence collegians were easy picking for Pennsylvania last Saturday. Pennsylvania will have a strong antagonist in Pennsylvania State, a rival which has caused the Quakers some trouble in the past.

Local football enthusiasts will have a chance of seeing New York University in action against Stevens at Ohio Field. N. Y. U. has shown considerable strength this season and should have no trouble in downing the eleven from Hoboken. The Army will meet Lehigh and Dartmouth will have her first hard struggle of the season against Williams. In the West, Chicago meets Northwestern and Michigan will journey to Columbus to meet Ohio University.

SWEEPING CHANGE IN TIGERS.

Severe Shifts in Line-Up of Princeton Team for Carlisle Game.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Oct. 21.—With seven important changes in the line-up, Princeton will play the Carlisle Indians here to-morrow afternoon on University Field. The 'Varsity went through its final signal practice this afternoon, and at the end of the drill the changes were announced as final.

The back field has been shaken up in this fashion: Pendleton goes to full back in place of Capt. Hart, who is shifted to left tackle; Ballou supplants Pendleton at left half back; Farr, one of the scrub quarter backs, will take Ballou's old position. Sparks will stay in his position at right half back. Tom Wilson, whose shoulder was hurt three days ago, will not be in the game, nor Duff, who plays left guard. Brown, an end of the early season, who has not been out for some time because of conditions in his class, will play right tackle.

Those of the line who were not changed are: McLean, right guard; White and Dunlap, ends, and Bluenthenthal, centre. Carlisle and Princeton have not met in three years. The Indians have scored 190 points, against 14 for their opponents, in seven games, and Princeton has scored 69 points in four games, and have not been scored on. The Indians average 169 pounds in weight.

Special to The New York Times.

CARLISLE, Penn., Oct. 21.—The Carlisle Indians left this afternoon for Princeton, where they will give the Tigers a stiff fight to-morrow. Coach Warner assembled his men at the noon hour to-day and gave instructions to the men, especially the new players. Libby will not be able to play in the Princeton game, but Houser will go in at full back. To-day's practice consisted mostly of signals, which ran through smoothly. The Indian line-up against Princeton will be: Left end, Jordan; left tackle, Newashe; left guard, Sweet Corn; centre, Garlow; right guard, Burd; right tackle, Powell; right end, Kennerly; quarter back, Arcasia; left half back, Dupuis; right half back, J. Wheelock; full back, Houser, Captain.

The principal "subs" will be: Quarter back, Island; tackles, H. Wheelock, Wheeler, Bracklin, and Lone Star.

FOOTBALL GAMES TO-DAY.

Capt. Houser said to-day that although his men were battered considerably, they would do their best against Princeton.

Stevens Eleven on Ohio Field.

When New York University lines up against Stevens Institute on Ohio Field at 3 o'clock this afternoon, the New York University players are expected to give a mighty good exhibition of new football. Every man is in the pink of condition and Captain Galloway says that all have mastered the different plays of which New York University has many. The forward pass is now handled with more precision and dispatch than at any time this season, and the end run looks to be a ground gainer of no small importance. Murphy and Yule, the fullbacks, are remarkably speedy players. The former is perhaps the faster, but cannot keep his feet like the latter.

Only light practice was indulged in yesterday, no tackling being permitted. The backs and ends were drilled in interference, and the latter coached in getting down the field under punts. Yule and Garsch practiced goal kicking from the 30-yard line. Secret signal practice was held in the gymnasium last night and Alcott was particularly pleased with the showing made.

Cornell Crippled for Vermont Game.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., Oct. 21.—Cornell does not expect to find Vermont very troublesome to-morrow in football, but the coaches do not expect a large score on account of the absence of some of the strongest men from the lineup. It has been a week of injuries here and the team will show the result to-morrow. Pitcher, right end, Zeller, right tackle, and Robb, left halfback, will not be in the lineup, according to the statement of the coaches to-night. These men are all recovering from injuries and will be saved for the Williams game next week. The plan is to use Blackwell at right end, Delano at right tackle and O'Conner at left halfback. While Delano is not in the best of condition he is believed to be stronger than either Zeller or Austin, who were out in practice, but did not show up well.

The team worked out in secret to-day under Coach Hutchinson, Coach Reed having gone home to register. The backs ran through practice in the forward pass and then the team tried new signals. The Cornell lineup will include Eyrich and Teagle, ends; Mink and Delano, tackles; Champaign and Hale, guards; Seagrave, centre; Butler, quarterback; O'Conner and Bates, halfbacks, and Simson, fullback.

Army Team in Fine Condition.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Oct. 21.—The Army team wound up its week's practice to-night with every man in excellent shape, with the exception of Hicks, who wrenched a leg in the Yale game and will not play to-morrow, and probably not until the Harvard game. Lamphier, whom Coach Nelly has been trying this week, will play right end, and it is expected he will make good. The soldiers have every confidence of defeating Lehigh. If opportunity presents, Morris and Spalding will get a chance to play in the back field and Hardy and Englehart at tackles. The line-up: Will Wood, left end; Littlejohn, left tackle; Wier, left guard; Arnold, centre; Walmsley, right guard; Devore, right tackle; Lamphier, right end; Hyatt, quarter back; Brown, right half back; Dean, left half back, and Surles, full back.

Results of Billiard Matches.

In the game last night of the amateur three-cushion carrom billiard tournament at the Knickerbocker Billiard Academy of Brooklyn, Dave Lauderbach defeated J. Chapman by the score of 50 to 39 in eighty-four innings. The game was played in fast time and both men played splendidly. Lauderbach made a high run of 5, while Chapman's best efforts netted him 3. To-night P. Cavanaugh and C. E. White will cross cues. The winner of this tournament will be selected to represent Brooklyn in the newly-formed National Billiard League.

In last night's game of the League preliminary three-cushion carrom billiard tournament now in progress at John Doyle's Forty-second Street Billiard Academy, John Manahan defeated Jimmie Blair in a close match by the score of 40 to 38 in sixty-five innings. Both players made a high run of 4.

Triple Meet at New West Side A. C.

All indications point to some clever athletic performances when the members of the Glencoe Athletic Club, Hudson Guild, and New West Side Athletic Club meet in their triple engagement on the New West Side Athletic Club grounds, Fifty-fourth Street, between Eighth and Ninth Avenues, to-morrow afternoon. Besides valuable prizes for each event a handsome point trophy cup will be awarded to the club securing the greatest number of points. The programme will be made up of nine events, as follows: 70-yard dash, 70-yard high hurdles, 300-yard run, 880-yard run, one-mile run, three-mile run, putting the sixteen-pound shot, running high jump, running broad jump, all from scratch.

VANDERBILT TEAM PLAYS YALE TO-DAY

Southerners, Unbeaten This Year, Expect to Fight Hard Battle with Elis.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Oct. 21.—To-morrow's football game at Yale brings together the North and South, Vanderbilt University, which plays here, being not only undefeated this season, but having a goal line which has been uncrossed. Capt. Neeley said to-night that the team brought its uncrossed goal line along with it. He said that he was confident of giving Yale a battle to-morrow. Capt. Daly of Yale said that he did not care to predict the result because it was uncertain, but that he believed that to-morrow's game would show a substantial improvement in his team since last Saturday's defeat at West Point. The Yale coaches admit that they expect to find in Vanderbilt fully as hard an opponent as the Cadets proved, but they figure that Yale's brace the past week, the shake-up in players, the change in Yale's offensive and defensive game will result in Yale fighting its way to a slender victory.

Both elevens were out this afternoon for signal practice, Yale working in public on the university gridiron in full view of some of the Vanderbilt rooters, and Vanderbilt going to the gridiron and taking secret practice an hour later. Capt. Noel of the Yale wrestling team was formerly a Vanderbilt football player and he accompanied the team. Yale coaches again swarmed upon the field. Yale's defeat at West Point has been regarded as a calamity unequaled in a midseason game since Columbia defeated Yale more than a decade ago, and the graduates have rallied to the support of the team and the resident coaches, Ted Coy and Harry Holt, in large numbers. The "degree team" to-day numbered fourteen, including Gordon Brown, George Goss, Ned Glass, Frank Hinkey, Vance McCormick, Pop Foster, Ray Biglow, Foster Sanford, Jim Rodgers, Brink Thorne, Jack Owsley, the two Henry Holts, and Ted Coy. Meade Robinson, the fastest half back on the eleven, again retired in the signal drill, wrenching the knee which he turned last month at Lakeville. He will probably play no more this season.

To-morrow experiments will be made in trying Van Sinderen at end and Scully at tackle. Strout, the new quarter back, will get his baptism of fire. The probable line-up:

Yale.	Position.	Vanderbilt.
Scully	Left tackle	Freeland
Morris	Centre	Morgan
Buckingham	Right guard	Metzger
Paul	Right tackle	J. Brown
Van Sinderen	Right end	Stewart
Strout	Quarter back	Robbins
Daly, (Capt.)	Right half back	Morrison
Reilly	Full back	Williams

HARVARD AND BROWN.

Crimson Team Will Have Many "Subs" in Game To-day.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Oct. 21.—Harvard will go into the Brown game to-morrow, expected to be her hardest scrap so far, with only one hard scrimmage during the week. The men, such as are fit, are in spry form after their week of easy practice, and were lively this afternoon in the short drill they were put through. Two teams, the 'Varsity and substitutes, ran through formations to be used to-morrow; then came a rehearsal of signals, followed by practice in running back the kick-off.

The 'Varsity lined up, as it will take the field to-morrow: Left end, Lewis; left tackle, McKay; left guard, Minot; centre, Huntington; right guard, Fisher; right tackle, Withington; right end, L. Smith; quarter back, Potter; left half back, Corbett; right half back, Wendell, and full back, Tryon.

This will bring the regular line into action, but it is not the strongest backfield available were all the backs in playing trim. Corbett is the only one of the four who could be called a regular. He, by the way, has another boil coming—on his knee this time. Ted Frothingham got into uniform this afternoon and did some drop kicking and running around the field. When Wigglesworth, the quarter back, will be fit to play again is uncertain.

His ailment, jaundice, may lay a man up anywhere from three days to three months.

Montie Pike Believes He Has "Comer"

Montie Pike, a good judge of boxers, is confident that he has an unusually promising bantam weight in Willie Carroll, a prodigy of the Gas House District. He has matched him to meet Tommy Hauck of Philadelphia in the main bout at the Olympic A. C. on next Monday night, and the fact that Pike has matched his boy against such a fighter as Hauck shows that he must be well impressed with his qualities. Pike also has Jimmy Goodwin of the United States Navy, a 133-pounder, under his wing, and the sailor will make his first public appearance in the ring on the same night as the "go" between Carroll and Hauck, for four rounds.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 21.—Most of to-day's races at Pimlico were run in a drizzling rain that reduced the fields through scratching but did not seem to affect the attendance. TRAVIS WINS TWO GOLF ROUNDS EASILY

Beats Shackleford and Newton by Big Margins on Atlantic City Links.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Oct. 21.—Two easy matches scarcely served as more than good practice rounds for Walter J. Travis in the continuation of the invitation golf tournament on the links of the Country Club of Atlantic City to-day. The Garden City star first disposed of W. E. Shackelford of the home club, 6 up and 5 to play, and later eliminated H. B. Newton of Frankford by a 7 and 6 margin. S. D. Bowers of Brooklawn, who is expected to reach the final stage against Travis, also had a rather comfortable time. The other winners were F. Kemble of the Philadelphia Country Club and S. Y. Ramage of Oil City, so that in the semi-final round to-morrow Travis will meet Kemble and Bowers will play Ramage.

Both morning and afternoon rounds found Travis playing steady golf, reaching the turn in 39. Rather unexpected was the defeat of A. W. Tillinghast of Philadelphia at the hands of H. B. Newton, one of the Frankford golfers. Tillinghast then found his game, and defeated Shackelford 2 up in the first round of the beaten eight division. The scores:

First Sixteen.—First Round—S. D. Bowers, Brooklawn, beat Thomas Ward, Birmingham, 6 up and 5 to play; Colin Thomson, Lancaster, beat McLeod Thompson, Atlantic City, 6 up and 4 to play; F. S. Race, Belfield, by default; Walter J. Travis, Garden City, beat W. E. Shackelford, Atlantic City, 6 up and 5 to play; H. B. Newton, Frankford, beat A. W. Tillinghast, Philadelphia Cricket Club, 5 up and 4 to play; S. Y. Ramage, Oil City, beat J. M. Thompson, Spring Haven, 1 up, (18 holes.)

Sensman, Atlantic City, 2 up; James Hume, Norfolk, beat T. T. Rushmore, Garden City, 1 up.

Second Round.—Richards beat Henry Brown, 3 up and 2 to play; A. F. Smith beat Marvel, 2 up and 1 to play; Hume beat J. E. Smith, 2 up and 1 to play; Wilkins beat King, 4 up and 3 to play.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Active and Lower—Call Money Rates, 3@3¼ Per Cent.

REALIZING SALES THE FACTOR

Distribution Depresses Prices After a Morning Advance—$4,000,000 Cash Loss by Banks.

In the early dealings on the Stock Exchange the course of prices was so strong as to suggest that the market was determined to pay no more attention to the higher money markets which the Bank of England's action forecasted than it had on Thursday, when the rate of the English institution was elevated a full 1 per cent. to the 5 per cent. quotation. Under the leadership of Steel and Reading the list moved forward vigorously, and it was not until midday that the first signs of deference to the money market position began to make their appearance. Then the pressure of realizing sales slowly overcame the market strength, and thereafter to the close of the day drove prices down steadily, although the pace was upon the whole deliberate. The two stocks conspicuous in the rise were equally prominent in the decline, and at the close prices were as a rule 2 points or so under the highest figures of the day and fractionally below Thursday night's quotations. The trading was on a large scale, transactions running to about 925,000 shares, and the evidence of professionalism in the dealings was as clear as it had been at any time in the recent past. Possibly the careful distribution which went on was prompted by suggestions from banking quarters; at least it is a fact that in these quarters there is a distinct tone of conservatism in comment on the situation brought about by the move of the English Bank.

Preliminary estimates of the currency movements of the week indicate a loss of at least $4,000,000 in cash, the greater part of this resulting from an unexpectedly heavy interior demand, while the Sub-Treasury drain was very much smaller than that experienced last week. So far as to-day's bank statement goes it seems to be the general opinion that the higher interest rates of the week have again worked as they did last week to bring about withdrawals of funds for direct placement and thus to reduce deposits and loans in such degree that the increase in the loan item brought about by the week's more active speculation will find only moderate reflection if any in the bank's return. The foreign exchange market was under close observation throughout the day owing to the expectation that in it there will be found the earliest indication of gold shipments. Demand sterling sold up a trifle above the high level of the previous day at one time, but offerings were sufficient to depress quotations later so that at the end of that day they rested at Thursday's level. Money rates, both call and time, were practically unchanged.

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE.

Friday.

Very heavy realizing sales were mainly responsible for the market reaction that set in on the Consolidated Stock Exchange following the sharp advances of the first hour. Many of the floor operators decided that the improvement had been too rapid to hold, and their selling added to the pressure against prices. Transactions totaled 120,600 shares, with the list embracing sixty-two different stocks.

ROBBINS & OPPER FAIL.

Liabilities of Consolidated Exchange Firm $7,000.

The failure of Robbins & Opper, members of the Consolidated Exchange, to meet their obligations was announced on the Exchange yesterday. The members of the firm are J. J. Robbins and A. A. Opper, and it has been in business for a year and a half. The firm's head office was in Boston, and it did a wire business to that city exclusively. The liabilities of the firm were under $7,000 and its available assets are said to amount to about 60 per cent. of the liabilities. The firm has twenty-four hours in which to make good its obligations on the Consolidated Exchange.

Fischer & Levy of 76 William Street, counsel for Robbins & Opper, explained that the cause of the failure was the extension of credit to customers.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES

Curb Stocks Advance in the Early Trading, but Close Reactionary.

COPPERS MAINTAIN STRENGTH

American Tobacco and Guggenheim Exploration Particularly Conspicuous for the Extent of Their Gains.

The outside security market was strong until the late trading yesterday, when prices shaded off and brought them back in many cases to opening levels. There were a number of sharp advances, however, the most conspicuous of which was in American Tobacco and Guggenheim Exploration. The last named was up at one time 5 points, but the recession in the late trade brought its net advance down 3 points, to 198. American Tobacco rose 7, to 425, and closed only a point below those figures. United Cigar on the other hand was especially weak, losing 3¾ points, to 61¼. The copper issues maintained a firm undertone, and Chino was again notable for a new high record for the year. The Cobalt issues, which have recently been showing strength were well held close to their best prices.

Michigan Central Notes Abroad.

The Michigan Central, it is learned, has been negotiating through J. P. Morgan & Co. for the sale in Paris of $10,000,000 of notes, to the probable issue of which President W. C. Brown referred in his testimony before the Inter-State Commerce Commission in the rate hearing last week. It was reported in cables from Paris yesterday that the notes had already been placed there, but this was denied on this side. President Brown said that the interest which the road would have to pay on these notes would be equivalent to a full 6 per cent.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

A Resort to Physical Valuation.

So much discussion has been given to the physical valuation of railroads in connection with the programme for the Governmental regulation of railroad rates and railroad capitalization, that something more than passing interest attaches to the fact that the Chaplin committee of Wabash Pittsburg Terminal bondholders has obtained a "physical valuation" of that property from a receiver of the road with a view to determining how much of value is behind their bonds irrespective of such value as may attach to the strategical position occupied by the Wabash Pittsburg Terminal Railway. The latter, after great opposition and the expenditure of a great many millions, obtained an entrance to the coveted traffic centre of the Pittsburg district. Many of the bondholders have contended that if the railroad were dismantled and sold for scrap and the real estate converted into cash they would realize more than the estimate of the present value of the property placed upon it by interests friendly to the old management of the property. The present "physical valuation" of the property underlying the bonds, after allowing for all obligations to which the first mortgage bonds are subject, including certain disputed claims, amounts, according to the estimate made for the committee, to about $20,000,000, or two-thirds the face value of the outstanding first mortgage bonds. In this estimate the property of the coal company owned by the Wabash Pittsburg has a value of $12,000,000, although some estimates made for the committee place the value as high as $15,000,000.

Brokers as Private Bankers.

The opinion of the Attorney General of the State holding stock brokers subject to the requirements of the private banking law passed at the last session of the Legislature would have aroused greater interest than it did among Stock Exchange houses yesterday had it not been for the fact that the law has already been held to be unconstitutional. The question of the constitutionality of the law has not yet been finally passed upon, as the decision will have to stand review by the higher courts, but meanwhile brokers feel pretty sure that the decision of the lower court will be upheld on appeal. Were it not for this, the opinion rendered by the Attorney General of the State would cause Stock Exchange houses to anticipate in the near future the inconvenience of subjecting themselves to the requirements of this law. The Attorney General has held that money deposited with stock brokers as margins is to be viewed for the purposes of this law in the same light as deposits. This would make all brokers doing a margin business in the stock market "bankers" in the sense of the Sullivan law.

Influence of Bank Rate.

So far stock market movements since the raising of the English Bank rate have really thrown very little light on the question of the effect the move of the bank has had upon the plans of the speculative interests of large calibre, who have been deeply concerned with the rising markets of the last few weeks. Bearish traders insisted that it was quite necessary that a bearish demonstration be made on Thursday, when the rate was put up, in order that followers of the rise might make the deduction that those in charge of the movement were unterrified and that the reaction yesterday reflected a very cautious realizing movement under cover of the impression created by Thursday's advance. More optimistic followers of the market object to such inferences, asserting that the failure of the advance in the bank rate to affect money rates here materially, so far, or to cause any further rise in the foreign exchange market yesterday shows that nothing alarming in a market sense is to follow the elevation of money rates in London. Allowing weight to the contentions of both sides to the controversy, it will have to be admitted that a new and probably unexpected factor, certainly not unqualifiedly favorable, has been injected into the stock market position.

The Harvester Dividend.

The way of the glowing reports accompanying the rise in some of the specialties on the Stock Exchange is proving to be hard. For example, much cheerfulness was extracted on Thursday from the perpendicular rise in International Harvester, which disclosed an ability to advance 5 points upon nothing more tangible than a rumor of increased dividends. Yesterday President McCormick of the company, in response to inquiries by Chicago newspaper men, issued a statement in that city ridiculing the dividend increase stories, and insisting that there was complete harmony in the Board of Directors over the policy of making no change in the payment until the results of the year's business were definitely known. This meant, he said, that nothing would be done until March, 1911. A five-point rise on Oct. 20, 1910, would seem to be almost premature, discounting of a possible dividend increase some time in March next.

A Chicago View of Money.

Wall Street is always ready to hear what John J. Mitchell of the Illinois Trust and Savings Bank of Chicago has to say about money market conditions, and therefore read with interest yesterday the following interview with Mr. Mitchell wired from Chicago: "With monetary conditions in Europe tightening, and with sterling exchange susceptible to gold exports, I think that higher rates in the immediate future are inevitable. I do not mean that demand for Stock Exchange purposes will bring about a higher premium, but it will be caused by the increasing inquiry from purely commercial and mercantile lines, which means that general business is increasing rapidly. The Steel people all expressed the conviction of an improvement in their industry, and when steel and iron improve it is logical that other lines will follow."

THE EUROPEAN MARKETS.

American Rails and Copper Firm in London—Consols Fall Again.

LONDON, Oct. 21.—Money was in small supply and discount rates were strong to-day.

On the Stock Exchange American rails and copper and Rhodesian shares were the firmest sections and advanced under broadening support, but the rest of the market eased on dearer money, consols declining 3-16.

American securities opened firm and a fraction higher. During the forenoon prices advanced on covering induced by favorable steel trade reports. The market declined slightly in the afternoon, but Wall Street support in the late trading caused a recovery and a steady closing.

Gold premiums are quoted at Madrid, 7.15; at Lisbon, 7.00.

Bar silver dull, at 23 3-16d per ounce.

Money, 3½ per cent.

The rate of discount in the open market for short bills was 4½@4⅝ per cent., and for three months' bills, 4⅝ per cent.

PARIS, Oct. 21.—A heavy tone prevailed on the Bourse to-day.

Three per cent. rentes, 97 francs 2½ centimes for the account.

FOREIGN TRADE OPPORTUNITIES.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 21.—The Consular and Trade Report will note the following foreign trade opportunities abroad. Further information regarding these may be obtained by addressing the Bureau of Manufactures, care of the Department of Commerce and Labor, Washington, D. C., giving the number of item referred to:

5,673. COTTONSEED OIL AND GREASES.—An American Consular officer in a country of Southern Europe reports that a business man in his district desires to secure exclusive representation in that country of American manufactures of cottonseed oil, animal, and vegetable greases for soap making. This merchant states that he is in a position to handle to advantage these goods throughout the country in question, and will furnish satisfactory references.

5,674. NOVELTIES.—A European business man advises an American Consular officer that he would like to be placed in communication with United States manufacturers of all kinds of novelties. He furnishes bank references. Communications may be addressed in English, but should be forwarded through the Consular officer submitting the report.

5,675. AMERICAN WHEAT FLOUR.—An American Consular officer in Italy reports that a local business man informs him that he is in a position to handle American wheat flour of first quality, there being considerable demand for a flour of higher grade than that made by Italian mills, a demand at present supplied by Austrian and Russian mills.

5,676. ELECTRIC LAMPS AND ELECTRICAL SUPPLIES.—A European business firm advises an American Consular officer that it desires to represent American manufacturers of incandescent electric lamps with metallic filaments, carbons for arc lamps, insulators, switches, and arc lamps.

5,677. AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS AND SEEDERS.—An American Consular officer in Russia writes that a local business house is anxious to get in touch with American manufacturers of agricultural machinery, especially clover seeders. He desires catalogues, prices, discounts, and other material facts in connection with their machines.

5,678. MATERIALS FOR WATER WORKS.—An American Consular officer in a Latin-American country has forwarded pamphlets containing the permanent specifications and conditions for the manufacture and delivery of cast-iron pipes, sluice, and other valves for water supply, and stoneware pipes. All pipes must be made strictly in connection with the stipulation of these specifications.

5,679. ERECTION OF SMELTER.—An American Consular officer in Mexico reports it is stated on good authority that a company has taken all the necessary preliminary steps for the erection of a smelter in his district. The smelter will have a capacity of 100 tons daily, and has a good field to draw on. The Partridge hot-blast system will be used, and the smelter will be conducted on the most modern lines.

5,680. FARMER IMPLEMENTS.—A business house carrying farming implements in a Latin-American country is about to establish a branch in another city for the sale of the same line of goods. Farming implements and vehicles of all descriptions will be handled, but no shelf hardware, although the Consular officer submitting the report states there is no question but that a general hardware line would be successful, as the surrounding country seems to be improving along good lines. It is said that only United States products will be sold.

5,681. PROPOSED PUBLIC WORKS.—A report from a United States Consul in the Levant states that the date for submission of bids for proposed public works in his district has been postponed from Sept. 30 to Nov. 13, 1910. The works include the construction of water works, construction of electric tramways, and electric light plant, construction of sewers, and the installation of a telephone service between several cities in his district.

CONDITION OF TRADE.

Summarizing the present position of trade Dun's Review says in its issue of to-day:

The actual volume of trade is well maintained, and the hopeful business sentiment which has been in evidence the last two weeks continues, and this has been confirmed and expanded by the remarkable foreign commerce statement for September, reporting an excess of exports amounting to $51,587,079, the largest for this month since 1900. This change in the foreign commerce position, taken in connection with the practically assured bumper corn crop and the extension of the existing arrangement in regard to bills of lading until the end of the year, when the bulk of the cotton crop will have been marketed, are the most cheerful features of the situation. Retail trade is somewhat affected by the unseasonable warm weather, but reports from most of the leading cities are quite satisfactory and reflect a cheerful view as to the outlook. The dry goods trade is especially optimistic, particularly in the West, although the readjustment of prices of cotton goods to the price of raw cotton is the week's principal development in this branch of the trade. Increased orders for shoes are reported. There is no marked expansion in the iron and steel industry, but the tendency seems to be toward improvement.

Bradstreet's says:

Wholesale and jobbing business displayed the same caution and conservatism noted earlier, and house buying was of a hand-to-mouth character, though reports from some leading markets are of a volume of trade equal or superior to last year. In some leading wholesale lines, such as cottons, the active buying movement of the past few weeks seems to have subsided, this being variously attributed to price advances, present or prospective, or to the retrograde movement in prices of the raw material following last week's sharp advance. Shoe manufacturers report orders affected by past unseasonably warm weather, but there is reported a slightly better feeling in some lines of worsted goods, and raw wool is firm. In the South the cotton crop movement has been freer, and this, with cooler weather, has made for a slight improvement in Southern trade and collections.

METAL MARKET REPORTS.

At the Metal Exchange yesterday an irregular tendency was shown. Copper was firm at an improvement of nearly ¼c in the price for all deliveries to January. Spelter rose 10 points. Tin was down ½c.

The closing bid and asked prices follow:

COMMODITIES MARKETS.

The wheat market was weak and lower, declining ⅜ to 1 cent and closed at only a little above the low point. The cables were disappointing early, not following the American advance of Thursday, and the Argentine news was favorable. Good rains were reported in northern Buenos Ayres and Cordova, also in southern Argentine. The morning statistics showed continuation of good shipments. The exports from India, Australia, and Argentine were 3,378,000 bushels, against 1,784,000 bushels the previous week and 504,000 bushels last year. Later in the day a statement was made by a Western house claiming a crop in the Argentine of 220,000,000 bushels probably this season against 131,000,000 bushels harvested last December. This resulted in a good deal of selling, but on analysis the figures lost their weight, as an average yield in the Argentine would be only about 35,000,000 bushels more than last year. The Modern Miller report told of Hessian fly thickly infesting the fields in sections where damage was reported last Spring. In the Southwest, however, there have been good rains. Bradstreet's exports for the week were fairly liberal, amounting to 2,845,000 bushels, but compared with 5,552,000 bushels a year ago. World's exports were estimated at 13,245,000. Cash wheat was inactive. No. 2 Red was quoted nominally, 99c. elevator; 99¼c, free on board; No. 1 Northern Spring, $1.14¾; No. 2 hard Winter, $1.04¾, and No. 1 Northern Manitoba, $1.05¼. No sales reported.

Corn was also weak and closed at a net decline of ⅜c to 1c per bushel. There was pressure on the market all day, and very little resistance. The weather was much better West, and there were predictions of an early movement of new corn while the recent advance seemed to have eliminated the short interest. The reports were disappointing as to the demand for cash corn, and no export business was shown. Bradstreet's exports for the week were the largest of the Fall, amounting to 819,000 bushels against 896,000 bushels last year. Spot corn was nominal, with No. 2, 57¼c, cost, insurance, freight, elevator, and 56¾c, free on board, afloat. No sales reported.

Oats were dull and weaker, influenced by the heaviness in other grain. Speculative demand was limited and prices sold on rather easily. The receipts are fair, but not heavy, and stocks are moderately decreasing, although still large. Cash oats were steady, with standards, 36¾c; No. 2 white, 37½c, and No. 3 white, 36½c.

Provisions were quiet, with the market showing a little net loss. Live hogs were somewhat lower at the West, influenced by the decline in feeding grain and lack of outside interest. The market eased off.

COTTONSEED OIL.

The market yesterday was still laboring under the influence of Wednesday's failure. According to the rules of the Produce Exchange all evening up had to be accomplished before the close, and it appeared that quite a number of houses had withheld from liquidating in anticipation of securing a better market. Prices for October were at the low since the decline started with selling heavy and shorts large buyers. Other months reflected these unsettled conditions with outside interests apathetic and inclined to await more definite news relative to the weather in the cotton belt. Toward the close freer offerings of crude and prospects of warmer weather in the South caused an easier feeling.

COTTON.

Cotton was active nearly all day, with prices showing broad fluctuations and at times active trade. The net result was a slight advance, but the feeling at the close was still rather unsettled. The movement of prices was governed largely by the weather news. The opening was higher on reports of freezing conditions in Oklahoma and Texas, but with the posting of the official weather report it was seen that the Texas temperatures did not get down to the freezing point, although Oklahoma temperatures were about freezing and in some cases below. The report in the afternoon that the weather was not moderating and another cold night seemed probable resulted in considerable covering. The bearish feeling in the morning after the early advance was increased by the Ellison estimate of only about 11,500,000 bales American consumption this year, or no larger than last year. The estimate was based on prevailing prices. The weekly figures were rather bearish. The into sight made an increase over the preceding week of 88,000 bales, and was 23,000 bales more than last year, the total amounting to 648,000 bales. The spinners' takings showed a decrease for the week compared with last year, and the result was an indicated increase in the visible supply of 337,000 bales of American cotton, which exceeded the gain last year by 40,000 bales. Receipts at the ports continue fairly liberal, and for Saturday were estimated at about the same as last year. The South, it is understood, has sold quite a little cotton on the recent advance. Southern spot markets were rather quiet, unchanged, to ⅛c decline.

New York spot cotton quiet, unchanged. Middling uplands, 14.45c; middling Gulf, 14.70c.

FINANCIAL NOTES.

Holders of the Wabash Railroad Company's 4¼ per cent. gold notes, extended from May 1, 1910, are informed that the interest on the notes, when due, will be paid at the office of the Central Trust Company, 54 Wall Street, on presentation of the coupons.

The Public Service Commission referred to its counsel yesterday the application received on Wednesday from counsel for the committee of bondholders for a rehearing on the plan for the reorganization of the Third Avenue Railroad system, disapproved by the commission on July 29.

Tailer & Co. have purchased equipment trust obligations of the Chicago & Alton, Minneapolis & St. Louis, and Iowa Central Railroads to the amount of $1,100,000. Included in the equipment covered by the notes are forty locomotives for the Chicago & Alton, twelve locomotives for the Minneapolis & St. Louis, and ten locomotives for the Iowa Central, recently delivered. It is understood that the banking house has already resold the entire amount of the notes taken.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Saddles of Pigskin Are Given Lower Rate Under New Tariff.

In an attempt to construe the saddlery paragraphs of the Aldrich-Payne tariff act of 1909, the Board of United States General Appraisers yesterday was unable to reach a unanimous decision. As matters now stand, the Federal Court of Customs Appeals will have to pass on the question, and possibly the Supreme Court may be obliged to review the case.

The importer in the case is the Smith Worthington Company of Hartford, Conn. This concern, which figures in the test case, imported articles invoiced as allover hogskin saddles on which duty was assessed at the rate of 35 per cent. under the provisions of paragraph 461 of the new law. The claim in the protest is that duty should have been taken at the rate of 20 per cent. under the terms of paragraph 450, which specifies "saddlery and saddles in sets or in parts, finished or unfinished, composed wholly or in chief value of leather."

The paragraph under which duty was exacted reads: "Saddles, saddlery in sets or in parts, finished or unfinished, 35 per cent. ad valorem." While the reading of these two paragraphs is almost identical, the rates of duty vary 15 per cent. The only difference between these two provisions, aside from the rate of duty, is that paragraph 450 is limited to harness, saddles, and saddlery composed wholly or in chief value of leather.

General Appraiser McClelland, who writes the decision for the board, says that it is unquestioned that in the absense of the last named paragraph, all harness, saddles, and saddlery of whatever material made, would be dutiable under paragraph 461 at the rate here assessed. General Appraiser Chamberlain concurs with the findings made by Mr. McClelland, while Judge Sharretts writes a dissenting opinion. The Sharretts opinion is unusually elaborate for a minority statement, and will probably figure later on when the issue gets before the Court of Customs Appeals.

The majority decision questions the good faith of the importers in making an appeal, it being stated that the reading of the record renders the conclusion unavoidable that the issue is not raised for the purpose of having the protests sustained. This, however, the majority decision does, while General Appraiser Sharretts holds that the protest should be overruled. After referring to the terms of the protest, General Appraiser McClelland says:

"Notwithstanding this language the protesting company at the hearing, instead of seeking to prove its claim, sought to establish by the only two witnesses called on its behalf that pigskin tanned and dressed is not leather. This was so manifestly in contradiction of the protest claim as to satisfy us that the issue had not been raised in good faith, but rather for the purpose of obtaining an adjudication in favor of the higher rate of duty on 'pigskin saddles,' that the board of its own motion reopened the case for further hearing."

FEEDER FOR CHESAPEAKE.

Clinchfield Line Proposes Joint Construction to Connect at Elkhorn.

The Carolina, Clinchfield & Ohio, which was financed by Blair & Co., has proposed to the Chesapeake & Ohio, it is learned, the joint construction of a line thirty-five miles long in Virginia to connect with the Chesapeake & Ohio at Elkhorn City, to make a through line from the southeast to the territory served by the Chesapeake & Ohio. This construction would be through heavy country and would be expensive, and the Chesapeake & Ohio has not yet decided to undertake the task. In connection with these negotiations the report was circulated yesterday that the Chesapeake & Ohio was considering the purchase of the entire Carolina, Clinchfield & Ohio property, but this was denied.

While no alliance has yet been established between these two roads it is thought in the financial district that it may be formed later on when the Chesapeake feels free to further enlarge its expenditures for the development of its system. The Clinchfield Road runs from Dante, Va., to Spartanburg, S. C., a distance of 245 miles, and thence it has an arrangement with the Southern Railway for the shipment of coal to Charleston.

Weekly Failure Report.

Bradstreet's reports 197 failures in the United States during the week, against 223 for the previous week, and 244, 231, 220, and 184 for the corresponding weeks of 1909 to 1906. The Middle States had 76, New England, 28; Southern, 38; Western, 27; Northern, 6; Far West, 22, and Territories, 0. Canada had 34, against 34 for the preceding week. About 86 per cent. of the total number of concerns failing had capital of $5,000 or less, and 8 per cent. had from $5,000 to $2,000 capital.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 21.—Stimulated by the early buoyancy of the New York market as reflected in the heavy buying of United States Steel and Reading in this city the Philadelphia list displayed an improving tendency throughout the morning. In the afternoon while the New York list reacted local shares maintained most of their gains. Lehigh Valley was the bright particular feature of the dealings. The price had pushed across 86 before 11 o'clock, and was maintained around that level thereafter.

COURT SUSPENDS HEINZE'S COUNSEL

Appellate Division Drops Sanford L. Robinson from the Bar for a Year.

LAUGHLIN WOULD DISBAR HIM

Justice, Dissenting from Opinion of Associates, Says Lawyer Showed a Reckless Disregard for the Truth.

Sanford L. Robinson, who as counsel for Arthur P. Heinze, was charged in the United States Circuit Court with resisting a United States Marshal in attempting to serve a subpoena, for which he was sentenced to pay a fine of $500, was yesterday suspended from the practice of law for one year by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court. This decision was made by a majority of the court, Justices Ingraham, Clarke, Scott, and Miller, and opposed by Justice Laughlin, who in a dissenting opinion said that Robinson should be disbarred for the good of the profession.

Justice Laughlin says that in deference to the views of his colleagues, he withdraws his formal opinion, but adds:

> On reading the evidence I became convinced that the respondent is guilty of the crime of having wilfully impeded the administration of justice, for which he was duly indicted, convicted, and sentenced in the Federal courts, also of the charge of having wilfully deceived the Federal Court and Grand Jury. Moreover, in the testimony before the Grand Jury on his trial, on the trial of Arthur P. Heinze, and on this hearing, I think that he has shown a reckless disregard of the truth.
> As I view the evidence he has clearly forfeited his rights to the office of attorney, and the nature of the charges, satisfactorily established, and his recklessness in testifying, merit extreme punishment, and in my opinion the dignity of the court and the good of the profession require that he should be disbarred.
> However, since my associates do not view the evidence as I do, and since I cannot yield to my convictions, for they have been confirmed by reflection, I have determined, in deference to their views and to the decision about to be made, to withdraw my formal opinion setting forth and discussing the evidence upon which my convictions are founded, and to record my dissent with respect to the punishment and my vote for disbarment on this memorandum.

Justice Ingraham, presenting the majority opinion of the court, says Sanford Robinson was born in Massachusetts, was graduated from Williams College, and was an honor graduate of Harvard Law School, with ancestors who "had borne a high reputation for generations."

Hamilton Odell, appointed by the court to hear the testimony as referee when the Bar Association presented charges against Robinson, exonerated the latter completely in his report to the Appellate Division, and declared that Robinson should neither be punished or disciplined. In addition to the charge of opposing the marshal, the Bar Association averred that Robinson, in the proceedings before Judge Lacombe in the Federal Court in the investigation of the United Copper Company affairs, made untrue statements for the "purpose of deceiving the court, so that certain books of the corporation then under investigation by the Grand Jury would not be obtained."

The third charge was to the effect that Robinson, who was sworn as a witness before the Grand Jury, "refused to testify in regard to a certain matter, upon the ground that it referred to a conversation between himself and Arthur P. Heinze, who was his client, and that said conversation was privileged, which was false and which position he was not justified in claiming."

Justice Ingraham says the court accepts the findings of fact by Hamilton Odell, but not the conclusions of the referee based on facts, recommending no punishment for Robinson.

The court also says Robinson was counsel for F. Augustus Heinze, and a Director of the copper company of which Heinze was President.

"It is quite evident from the testimony that the employes of this copper company," says Justice Ingraham, "were endeavoring to prevent the production of these books, and the thorough investigation which the Federal authorities desired of the affairs of this corporation."

"Of the third count against Robinson," Justice Ingraham says, "this count alleges that the Grand Jury were investigating certain violations of section 5,209 of the Revised Statutes of the United States pertaining to National banks, whereby it was charged by the United States Attorney that Fritz Augustus Heinze, as President of the Mercantile National Bank of the City of New York, had violated such section of the statutes; that when a writ was issued and an attempt was made to serve it on one Buckingham, at the office of the United Copper Company, Robinson warned Buckingham to avoid the marshal and evade the service of the subpoena.

"This offense, being a misdemeanor, the conviction did not of itself disbar the defendant, as it would have disbarred him had it been a felony. The referee in his report says the defendant was ignorant of the statutes. The referee says a misdemeanor does not necessarily imply any moral delinquency, and is not, per se, an impairment of the good character of the person convicted. The referee then calls attention to several acts which by law are misdemeanors namely, to get on a car or train while in motion; to wilfully wear unless entitled, to the badge or button of the Grand Army of the Republic, and to offer skimmed milk for sale without disclosing its quality, and states that conviction for any one of these offenses would not demonstrate that the party convicted was depraved, or of bad character, and would not affect his standing socially or otherwise as a citizen. And if he chanced to be a lawyer it would not prove his unfitness for that office.

"Such illustrations are hardly relevant where an attorney has been guilty of impeding justice," states Justice Ingraham. "The respondent in this case was in the employ of clients who were supposed to have great wealth, and who were at the head of important corporations. The impression that they were immune from civil or criminal prosecution for their acts, seems to have pervaded the community of late years, and with it has grown up a sentiment among many members of the profession that in carrying out their behest, a lawyer is performing his duty to the profession, to the public, and to the courts.

"If the profession is to have the respect of the community, if it is to be trusted by courts and by others who have to do with administration of justice, its members must realize that a crime is a crime, whoever commits it."

TO BLOCK COTTON PLAN.

Liverpool Association Understood to be Against a Guaranty Company.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 21.—It is understood that the Liverpool Cotton Association is opposed to the establishment of a company to guarantee cotton bills of lading, as was proposed at the recent conference in New York between American bankers and Sir Edward H. Holden, Managing Director of the London City and Midland Bank, representing British financial interests.

Since an agreement on the question is impossible without the consent of the Liverpool Cotton Association it is feared that the settlement of the controversy may be indefinitely prolonged.

TURKISH LOAN HALTED.

France Announces That It Has Not Been Consummated Yet.

PARIS, Oct. 21.—It was officially stated to-day that the French loan to the Turkish Government had not been as yet definitely consummated.

An official note issued at Paris last Wednesday evening confirmed the report that an agreement had been reached between Turkey and France for the floating of a $30,000,000 loan in the French capital. The note added that France had obtained the guarantees demanded from Turkey.

CHICAGO STOCK MARKET.

CHICAGO, Oct. 21.—Moderate trading on the local Exchange developed no features of special interest. Weakness in Booth Fisheries preferred caused a little surprise. Street's Stable Car Line is another company which is said to be making an improved showing under new management, but there was not much disposition shown to trade in that stock to-day. Supporting orders resulted in a little betterment for Illinois Brick.

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Big Sale on Seventh Avenue Above Times Square for $1,000,000 Apartment—Hardman, Peck & Co. Buy West 52d Street Plot—Half Million Deal on Morningside Heights.

The realty market showed a return to its old-time activity yesterday, a number of deals of more than ordinary note being recorded. Of chief importance as revealing the rapid development of the Broadway section north of Times Square was the sale of the southeast corner of Seventh Avenue and Fifty-fourth Street, a plot 100.5 feet on the avenue and 100 feet on the street. The buyers, who wish to be known for the present as the Fifty-fourth Street Realty Company, intend, after taking title next month, to begin the immediate erection of a high-class apartment house. The structure, it was said last night, will cost fully $1,000,000 and will in all respects be one of the finest houses of its class in the city.

In this connection it is significant to note the development of that section of Seventh Avenue as a splendid apartment house centre in recent years. Opposite the corner just purchased is the old Grace Reformed Dutch Church, and on the adjoinning corner, at Fifty-fifth Street, is the large Wyoming apartment house, while on the southeast corner of Fifty-eighth Street and the same avenue is Alwyn Court, which is restricted entirely to apartments of the $8,000 to $9,000 a year class. On the west side of the avenue opposite the Wyoming a new apartment has lately been finished.

The corner is now occupied by seven old brick dwellings, six facing the street and one near the middle of the avenue.

Big Deal on West 52d Street.

The Travers' Securities Company have sold to Hardman, Peck & Co., piano manufacturers, the property at 524 to 544 West Fifty-second Street and 531 West Fifty-first Street, formerly occupied by Travers Brothers as a twine and cordage manufactory.

The property has a frontage of 200 feet on Fifty-second Street and 25 feet on Fifty-first Street. On the Fifty-second Street end of the plot are two six-story and one seven-story structures, and there is a three-story building on the Fifty-first Street side.

Buys 36th Street Houses.

Frederick Fox & Co. have sold for Henry L. Byrnes, Rose Byrnes, and Catherine E. Brady the three private dwellings at 141 to 145 West Thirty-sixth Street, covering a plot measuring 60 by 98.9 feet, about 200 feet west of Broadway. The houses are in the rear of the old parochial school of the Church of the Holy Innocents on West Thirty-seventh Street, which was recently leased by the same brokers for a long term for business purposes. They have been owned by the Byrnes family for many years, the residence at 141 having been the home of the family since 1873. The purchaser is Edward W. Browning, who will hold the plot for investment.

Third Avenue Corner Sold.

An important Third Avenue sale, comprising the southeast corner of Sixty-fourth Street, 100.5 feet on the avenue and 130 feet on the street, has been made for Jane Sanders and Katharine S. Rose by Horace S. Ely & Co. Lowenfeld & Prager are the buyers. Old buildings now occupy the plot. The sale of this plot gave credence to a rumor that the buyer was the Manhattan Eye, Ear, and Throat Hospital, whose property adjoins on the east. The Sixty-third Street front is vacant, and it was said that any contemplated new buildings would be erected here before purchasing additional land. The buyers have no immediate plans for improvement.

Two West End Ave. Dwellings Sold.

Several sales of private dwellings were recorded yesterday, the demand for which continues unabated. The three-story dwelling, 303 West 102d Street, on a lot 20 by 80.11, has been sold for occupancy by Alice L. Christie.

Helen A. Horoson has sold 489 West End Avenue, a four-story dwelling, on a lot 20 by 100.

M. Nelson has purchased 6 Commerce Street, a three-story frame building, on a lot 25 by 87.6.

$500,000 Sale on the Heights.

A sale aggregating over $500,000 in the apartment house section of the upper west side illustrates the continued demand for realty in that district available for high-class improvement. Klein & Jackson, who have operated to a considerable extent in the upper part of the city, purchased from the Clark estate eight lots on the west side of Broadway, between 114th and 115th Streets. Earle & Calhoun were the brokers. The property has been held at $520,000. The plot is one of the few large vacant parcels in the Morningside Heights region, where building operations have been extensively carried on in recent years. It is within a block of the 116th Street Subway station, and opposite the old South Field of Columbia University.

Buys Fort George Corner.

Another important sale in the Fort George section of Washington Heights was announced yesterday by F. H. Weeks, who sold to a builder the northwest corner of 209th Street and Amsterdam Avenue. The plot measures 75 by 100, and it is said that ground will be broken at once for the erection of modern apartment houses.

Hoffman Arms Not Sold.

The rumor that the Hoffman Arms, on the northeast corner of Madison Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street, had been sold was denied last night. The building is owned by the Hoffman estate, and has a frontage of 100 feet on the avenue and 95 feet on the street.

Purchase of Bronx Corner.

The Reliance Realty Company has purchased from the John I. Tully Company the plot 50 by 100 at the corner of Wilkins Avenue and 170th Street. The buyers will erect two five-story flats. Carl & Gibbons negotiated the sale.

Bronx Sales.

Morton S. Hahn has purchased from the Archer Realty Company the building on a lot 23 by 75 at the southeast corner of Decatur Avenue and 198th Street.

BUSINESS TROUBLES

ALEXANDER LUSTIG.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against Alexander Lustig, manufacturer of neckwear at 656 Broadway, by these creditors: Samuel J. Aronsohn, Inc., $520; Majestic Neckwear Company, $187, and Max Pincus, $24. It was alleged that he was insolvent, made preferential payments of $1,000, transferred merchandise and accounts of $1,000, and removed a large part of his property. The assets are estimated at $1,000.

RABINOWITZ BROTHERS.—Schedules in bankruptcy of Rabinowitz Brothers, manufacturers of women's underwear at 178 Grand Street, show liabilities of $28,291 and assets of $25,657, consisting of stock, $13,649; machinery and fixtures, $6,600; new accounts, $4,744; old accounts, $445; cash, $184; gas deposits, $15, and check, $20. Among the creditor are M. I. & J. Cohen, $3,897, secured; Mercantile Warehouse, $2,123, secured; Consolidated Industrial Company and D. B. Phillips, $2,400, secured; F. Widner, $3,127, and I. Zeidman, Son & Co., $2,347.

JAMES B. BRADY.—James B. Brady, dealer in building materials at 104th Street and East River, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $25,125 and assets of $14,009, consisting of stock, $578; horses and trucks, $1,480; tools, $20; accounts $4,566; note, $250; stocks and bonds, $607; cash, $8, and real estate $6,500, which is his residence, 525 East 116th Street, on which there is a mortgage and taxes due of $5,616, and it is under foreclosure. Among the creditors are Annie E. Brady, $6,853, secured; Phoenix Towing and Transportation Company, $5,655 for sand; Herman Finck, $2,363 for feed, and John T. Brady, $2,000, loan.

A. ZINA STRAIGHT.—Allice Zina S. Watson, doing business as A. Zina Straight, dressmaker, at 39 West Thirty-eighth Street, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $2,891 and nominal assets of $1,590 in outstanding accounts, of which $638 is due her by Zina Straight, a corporation, for salary and merchandise, and 500 shares of stock of that corporation, value unknown, and assigned as security for a debt of $129. This is her third petition in bankruptcy. As Allie Z Straight she filed a petition on Sept. 21, 1898, which was closed without a discharge. The second one was filed on Dec. 20, 1900, and she received a discharge on Aug. 21, 1901.

ISAAC PEISER.—Isaac Peiser, who has lived at 327 Central Park West and 214 West Ninety-second Street, no occupation, with an income of $4,500 a year, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $5,206 and no available assets for creditors. His income of $375 a month is from a trust deed made by Carrie Peiser on Nov. 13, 1905, for which he claims exemption. He has an action against the trustees of the estate of Carrie Peiser to set aside the trust deed. Among his creditors is Charles B. Marks of 211 West Forty-fifth Street, $700, checks given in payment of gambling losses and amount due on gambling losses in June, 1910, disputed. Other creditors are A. Neulander, $916, money loaned; B. Weinberg, $866, loan; Lincoln National Bank, $300, note, and Jacob Borkman estate, $550, rent.

J. B. & J. M. CORNELL COMPANY.—The J. B. & J. M. Cornell Company, structural iron and steel contractors at Eleventh Avenue and Twenty-sixth Street, which for the last nineteen months has been endeavoring to effect a reorganization, has been unable to do so, and Judge Holt has at last adjudicated the company bankrupt on the application of Henry W. Sykes, attorney for the Hawkins Iron Works of Brooklyn, an intervening creditor whose claim is $2,409, and the case has been sent to William Allen, referee in bankruptcy, of 67 Wall Street to take further proceedings. A petition in bankruptcy was filed against the company on March 22, 1909. A Gordon Murray and Michael Blake were appointed receivers. They have continued the business ever since and have issued $200,000 receivers' certificates. The time for the company to answer to the petition has been extended from time to time, until Mr. Sykes objected to further extension and made a motion for an order of adjudication, which was granted on the ground that the time to plead had expired.

Mr. Sykes said yesterday that he believed the plan of reorganization had not been accepted and the business would, no doubt, proceed to liquidation.

GIRLS LEAD THE BOYS IN TIMES' CONTEST

Their Essays on the History of Bergen, N. J., Show a Closer Attention to Detail.

COMMEND TEACHERS' WORK

Their Painstaking Training of the Children Indicated in the Compositions—Some Articles Too Long.

Work on THE TIMES's essay contest is in full swing with the examining staff finding new features of interest in the offerings of nearly every class.

The efforts of the teachers to make clear the important historical facts of the early struggle of the Dutch settlers of Bergen Village, N. J., show plainly. That the children responded sympathetically is particularly shown in their accuracy of statement, and, as well, by their evident understanding of the hard conditions the pioneers met and conquered.

There is a notable difference in the offerings of the higher grades. The children from eleven to thirteen years of age show a care in detail and an adherence to chronological sequence, surpassing the efforts of the younger pupils whose work was first examined. The poetic and romantic aspects of the early days and early struggles are often dwelt upon at considerable length.

One little miss of eleven, however, regarded the conditions of existence as humdrum. This was her comment:

> The stillness in Bergen for nearly two centuries was broken only by the sound from the poultry yard of the barking of a restless dog.

A girl who dwells in the present and possesses a genius for terse statement of fact in colloqial language introduces herself as follows:

> Jersey City is once more on the map. The eyes of all its neighbors are turned this way. And for the next eight days there will be something doing within the territory.

The composition submitted by this wide-awake pupil lacked adherence to historical fact, however, and was too long to be fairly considered, running over 700 words. Other things being equal, it is believed that the child who tells the story and tells it well in the 500 words stipulated by the terms of the contest is mor justly entitled to a prize than those who cover too many pages. Extraneous matter is not, and can not be, considered.

There are evidently a few bright children who are yet not bright enough to know that the real substance of the articles must be followed.

As usual, human nature crops out abundantly. In one case an irate father came in to complain that a teacher had used his daughter's composition as a model and to demand that the girl should be awarded first prize. It was discovered by the examining staff that the teacher had recommended this essay as being, in her opinion, worthy of first prize.

Girls so far are winning more prizes than boys. They show a greater attention to detail and a far better understanding of the life of the early settlers and the hardships endured.

The boys are ready in their appreciation of the facilities offered for trading with the Indians.

Many of the children affectionately call Henry Hudson "Henery." One lad says. "While he was over here he discovered a very useful river, and called it Hudson River."

ONLY 490 WOMEN REGISTERED

Equal Suffrage Champions Dismayed by Chicago's Poor Showing.

CHICAGO, Oct. 21.—Four hundred and ninety women of Chicago registered, according to a compilation yesterday of the Election Board. Their votes may be cast next month for candidates for Trustees of the University of Illinois.

The total fell short of the expectations of equal suffrage champions, who had been conducting an "educational campaign" to bring members of their sex to the polls. All feminine enrollment was in 243 precincts, being less than one-fifth of the 1,329 precincts in the Chicago election districts.

In three wards—the Fourth, Eleventh, and Sixteenth—not a woman registered on either of the days when the books were open.

TO DEDICATE MEETING HOUSE

Society for Ethical Culture Will Hold Services Three Days Next Week.

Dedication ceremonies of the new meeting house of the Society for Ethical Culture, Central Park West and Sixty-fourth Street, will begin to-morrow morning, when the meeting house will be dedicated to its distinctively ethical and religious purposes. This service will be open only to members of the society.

The ceremonies will be continued on Monday evening, when the house will be dedicated to its civic purposes. At this meeting, which will be open to the public, well-known speakers will address the audience on themes of civic interest.

A dinner by the society's members and their personal guests will take place on Tuesday evening in the assembly room, and on Wednesday, Oct. 26, exercises of the Ethical Culture School will be held in the new meeting house at noon.

The new building is a five-story structure immediately adjoining the Ethical Culture School. The basement contains an assembly room. The auditorium on the main floor seats 950, and a gallery brings the total seating capacity to 1,200. An organ has been installed, and several memorial windows donated. Here will be held the society's Sunday services, formerly held in Carnegie Hall.

SCHOOL CLASSES TOO LARGE.

Shouldn't Be More Than 35 Pupils in Each, Says Supt. Maxwell.

President Winthrop of the Board of Education and Supt. of Schools Maxwell told the Sub-Committee on Schools of the Congestion of Population Commission yesterday what the needs of the city are for educational improvement.

"We need many more schools," said President Winthrop. "We ought to begin construction at once. At the present rate of progress we will never solve the part-time problem."

Dr. Maxwell declared that in nearly 150 classrooms in the city the number of pupils is altogether too large. Secretary Marsh of the commission asked what the average is in these classes and the doctor replied that it is sixty. He declared that thirty-five pupils should be the limit in a class, and that there are over 8,000 classes in the city in which the number of pupils is over forty.

GEBHARDT CONVICTED OF LUTHER MURDER

Man Who Shot Girl in Islip Woods Must Go to the Electric Chair.

JURY OUT FOR AN HOUR

Prisoner, Who Had a Family in Astoria, Married the Girl, Took Her Money, and Killed Her.

Special to The New York Times.

RIVERHEAD, L. I., Oct. 21.—After an hour's deliberation, the jury, which heard the evidence in the trial of Frederick Gebhardt, for killing Anna Luther, to-day returned a verdict of "Guilty of murder in the first degree."

Justice Aspinall, who presided at the trial, commended the jurors after they had rendered the verdict.

"If you had given a verdict for a lesser degree," he declared, "you would have disgraced yourself and Suffolk County."

Gebhardt's attorneys offered no evidence in his defense. They will appeal from the verdict on the ground that Justice Aspinall improperly admitted the testimony of Deputy Sheriffs, who swore Gebhardt had confessed killing the girl.

Gebhardt gave his history to the clerk of the court and then Deputy Sheriffs led him back to jail to await sentence. He admited he had been found guilty of bigamy twelve years ago, and by a coincidence Justice Aspinall presided at this previous trial also.

The prosecutor charged that a bigamy had preceded the murder of Anna Luther. Gebhardt, who had a wife and children in Astoria, he said, had persuaded the Luther girl to marry him to get possession of her savings. Then he lured her to the woods in Islip and shot her while she pleaded that he should not desert her.

Months after the shooting, a nine-year-old boy playing in the woods found her skeleton. Gebhardt had returned to his family in Astoria and was living there when detectives went to arrest him. He confessed his crime to the police, to Coroner Savage, and the guard in the Islip Jail. His counsel will incorporate in his appeal the fact that one of the custodians of the jury was a Deputy Sheriff who testified to the confession.

Gebhardt showed great self-possession at his trial. He did not flinch when the prosecution produced the skull and bones of the murdered girl in the courtroom. He saw her locks of hair held up before the jury with the same composure he maintained when he heard a New York dentist testify that he had made the fillings and crowns on the murdered woman's teeth and identified them as the teeth of Anna Luther.

But Gebhardt showed surprise and dismay when the jury returned a verdict of first degree murder. His footsteps faltered as he was led back to the jail and his jailors had to support him. Gebhardt's wife, who attended earlier sessions of the trial, but did not appear in the courtroom to-day.

PRISONERS FORGET NAMES.

Confusion in Court When Gambling Cases Are Called.

Twenty-seven of the prisoners taken in Thursday's raids on two Tenderloin and three lower east side alleged gambling houses pleaded not guilty to indictments found against them before Judge Mulqueen in General Sessions yesterday. All the prisoners were released on $1,000 bail each.

Many of the men who gave fictitious names when arrested on Thursday night were unable to remember them and considerable difficulty was experienced before Assistant District Attorney Smith could get their real names.

Judge Mulqueen criticised the manner in which the raids had been made. He did not think that the use of axes and crowbars was necessary.

Assistant District Attorney Smith asked that the bail for John Huhl, the alleged proprietor of the house at 112 West Forty-fifth Street, be held under $5,000 bail for running a fixed roulette wheel. This motion was denied by Judge Mulqueen, who let Huhl go on $1,000 bail.

Girl's Slayer Pleads Guilty.

Frank Kindel of 357 East Seventy-first Street, who shot and killed his sweetheart, Frances Mengler of 90 East End Avenue, on the night of Aug. 11, pleaded guilty to murder in the second degree before Justice O'Gorman, in the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court, yesterday. Kindel, a young Austrian machinist, has been in this country four years. After the shooting, which was owing to the girl's refusal to marry him, Kindel tried to kill himself.

MOHONK PLATFORM PLEADS FOR INDIAN

Conference Urges Federal Government to Protect Him from Drinking and Gambling.

WOULD END RESERVATIONS

President Asked to Abandon a System Declared Objectionable and Unwise—Porto Rican Citizenship Discussed.

MOHONK LAKE, N. Y., Oct. 21.—Porto Rican affairs and the "platform" of the Lake Mohonk Conference of the Friends of the Indians, an annual feature of the gathering, absorbed the attention of the conference to-day.

In the unavoidable absence of Señor Luis Munoz Morales, formerly Judge of the District Court of Guayama, Porto Rico, his prepared address was read by Señor Martin Travieso, Jr., of San Juan, a member of the Porto Rican Executive Council. Señor Morales expressed the view in his paper that the theory of individual naturalization for Porto Ricans was inadmissible in solving the problem of citizenship for his fellow-islanders. Only collective naturalization would do, he thought.

This in part was the "platform" adopted by the conference:

"As the result of nearly thirty years of public debate the people of this country have wisely adopted as the policy of the nation the abandonment of the reservation system, the dissolution of the tribal organizations, and the incorporation of the Indians as individual members of the American communities. The Indian problem has now become almost wholly one of administration in carrying this policy into effect. This involves:

> The protection by the Federal Government of the personal and property rights of the Indian.
> The vigorous prosecution and condign punishment of all who by violence, fraud or corruption violate these rights.
> The protection of the Indians during this transition period from the vices of drinking and gambling.
> The sanitation of their homes and settlements.
> The encouragement of friendly relations between the Indians and the local communities, in or near which they are situated.
> The taxation of the inherited and surplus lands of all Indians according to the precedent set by the action of the last Congress relating to the taxation of the Omaha Indians.
> The extension of Indian education until provision is made for the education of all Indian children of school age.
> Special emphasis upon industrial, moral and political education, that the Indians may be enabled to become self-supporting and self-governing members of the community.

The Business Committee reported a resolution requesting the President of the United States to recommend to Congress the abandonment of the reservation system in this State, with provision for the judicial determination of land company claims; also to request the President to have determined whether the Federal or State Government is properly chargeable with police power in New York State reservations, and take such steps as will lead to better regulation of conduct of residents of these reservations, and to request Congress and the State of New York to co-operate in these matters. The State Health and Excise Departments were asked to enforce sanitary and liquor laws in the reservations.

The Telephone an Aid to the Salesman

"Let me speak with the superintendent, please."

"Mr. Wilson, this is Allen. I am at Blank & Company's. They want a reprint of 50,000 copies of their last booklet providing we can make delivery in 6 days. Can we do it?"

"Good! You can begin work at once. I will arrange for the formal order. Good-bye."

The above indicates one of the many ways in which the telephone helps a salesman to secure an order.

While the salesman is in a customer's office, the telephone keeps him in touch with his own office or manufacturing plant. Rush orders can be given immediate attention. Matters involving special consideration, or the approval of his firm, can be settled without delay.

By means of the telephone, orders can be clinched on the spot, that might otherwise be lost entirely.

Are your salesmen making the most effective use of the telephone?

BATTLE HYMN OF THE REPUBLIC

By JULIA WARD HOWE

MINE eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord:
He is trampling through the vineyard where the grapes of wrath are stored;
He hath loosed the fateful lightnings of his terrible swift sword:
His truth is marching on.

I have seen Him in the watch-fires of an hundred circling camps,
They have builded Him an altar in the evening dews and damps;
I can read His righteous sentence by the dim and flaring lamps:
His day is marching on.

I have read a fiery gospel writ in burnished rows of steel:
"As ye deal with my contemners so with you my grace shall deal."
Let the hero born of woman crush the serpent with his heel,
Since God is marching on.

He has sounded forth the trumpet that shall never call retreat;
He is sifting out the hearts of men before His judgment seat.
Oh! be swift, my soul, to answer Him, be jubilant my feet!
Our God is marching on.

In the beauty of the lilies Christ was born across the sea,
With a glory in His bosom that transfigures you and me;
As He died to make men holy, let us die to make men free:
While God is marching on.

TOPICS OF THE WEEK

The Author of the Battle Hymn

Due tribute is paid to Julia Ward Howe on the editorial page of the Review. Her eminence came not from the possession of any single gift in a superlative degree, but from the manysidedness of her endowment and of her achievement. Poet, essayist and lecturer, advocate of woman's rights as she conceived them, social organizer and genial hostess, her intellectual and spiritual light shone brightly in many directions; and there was nothing garish in its beams. No one would call Mrs. Howe a great poet, yet (as Dr. Holmes said of the author of "America") she "shouted a song for the brave and the free" that will keep her memory green for ages. Called away at a very advanced age, though still fairly active, there is nothing to regret in her death, save the loss to her family and many friends of a delightful and stimulating presence.

A Heavy Blow to American Letters

It is quite different in the case of William Vaughn Moody, the poet and playwright, whose death was reported on the same day this week. Only one year over forty, Mr. Moody was still a year younger than Mrs. Howe was when her noble "Battle Hymn" thrilled the North like a bugle call by its beauty, stateliness and vigor. And the way he "rose" to the situation created by the Boxer uprising in China, showed what might have been expected of him if the nation had confronted some real crisis in his life time. "A Time of Hesitation" is not the stuff that great odes are usually built on; yet working even on such negative material as this, Mr. Moody's imagination contrived to turn out what should prove to be a permanent contribution to American literature. In his lines on a miniature of his mother (to name only these two of many fine poems) he achieved a masterpiece of pathos and beauty. And while his recent drama, "The Faith-Healer," failed of popular success, his first prose play, "The Great Divide," showed that he could "take the town" without attempting to cut under the best-sellers. Had his life been spared, he should have become a power in the literary world. As it is, American letters could have suffered no worse blow than has befallen in his death.

With The New York Times to-morrow will be published the Autumn Book Number, giving a select list of nearly one thousand of the season's books. It is important to place your orders for this issue now.—Adv.

The Same Old "Elizabeth"

It is delightful to find the author of Elizabeth and Her German Garden the same old Elizabeth (ungallant as it sounds) that she was when she first made her bow to the reading public. It isn't so many years since she was cordially welcomed by the English-speaking world, and she is in no danger of wearing out her welcome, so long as she continues to write in the easy-going, ironical style of which her latest book, "The Caravaners," proves her still the mistress. Here is a characteristic passage from an early page, the speaker being Baron Ottringel, the autobiographical narrator of the story:

> A reasonable man will take care to consider the suggestions made by his wife from every point of view before consenting to follow them or allowing her to follow them. Women do not reason: they have instincts; and instincts would land them in strange places, sometimes, if it were not that their husbands are there to illuminate the path for them and behave, if one may so express it, as a kind of guiding and very clever glowworm. As for those who have not succeeded in getting husbands—the flotsam and jetsam, so to speak, of their sex—all I can say is, God help them.

A Question of Literary Delicacy

"Margery," by "Dodo" Benson, now running in The Queen, brings up a question of literary propriety, or personal good taste, which every author is at liberty to answer for himself. That question is, How far may a writer go in praising his own work? In Chapter VII of the romance above mentioned, the heroine dips into a little volume that an "antiquated friend" has sent to her; and the author of the story proceeds to describe it in terms that must have brought the blush of pride to the cheek of modesty as he penned them. For the book is, presumably, a non-existent one, and the quotation therefrom—which is supposed to justify the references to its "lucid yet decorated periods," its "brilliancy," its "fineness, exquisiteness, delicacy," the "beauty of the writing" and the "music of the words" that the reader's ear "feeds on," as she reads it aloud to herself—is, we must suppose, a purple patch of the author's own composition. If it was necessary that the surpassing merit of the thing should be dwelt upon, might it not have been better to let the heroine do the dwelling? Authors are notoriously sensitive and high-strung, and Mr. Benson must have winced when he threw these highly colored and highly scented bouquets at himself.

Job's Wealth and That of Gen. Terrazas

In the course of a recent review of the second volume of Dr. Ginsberg's "Legends of the Jews" occurs this statement:

> Rabbinic fancy is exuberant. We are gravely told how Job had 130,000 sheep with 800 dogs as guardians, besides 200 watchdogs for his house. He had 340,000 asses and 3,500 pairs of oxen. His benevolence was unlimited, and ships were employed to carry supplies to the cities and dwellings of the destitute.

No wonder the reviewer regarded all this as apocryphal; yet it is by no means necessarily so. For if we are to credit the newspaper acounts of the possessions of "Mexico's richest citizen," Gen. Luis Terrazas of Chihuahua, Job was only in the second class of the world's great landed proprietors. This man—whose wealth, by the way, was not inherited—is the father-in-law of Señor Don Enrique Creel, late Mexican Minister to the United States. According to one of the latest newspaper reports, his holdings in the State of Chihuahua alone comprise several millions of acres, employing 10,000 men, 1,000 of whom are occupied in riding the boundaries of the ranches and keeping up the thousands of miles of wire fences. Several hundred thousand goats and sheep graze upon his land, we are told; of cattle and mules there are more than 1,000,000 each, and of horses about 5,000,000. How paltry appear the possessions of the patient patriarch of Uz when contrasted with an inventory such as this!

REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK

How Kate Douglas Wiggin Was Induced to Turn Her Enormously Popular Books Into a Play

ONCE AN AMATEUR ACTRESS

Her First Effort a Child's Story Written for St. Nicholas

By EMILY M. BURBANK

THE coming to New York of "Rebecca," after a season of great success in Boston and throughout New England, brings to mind many interesting facts relative to the play and its maker, Kate Douglas Wiggin.

To begin with, it was no longer ago than the Spring of 1908 that Mrs. Wiggin first submitted "Rebecca" to Messrs. Klaw & Erlanger, and received from them, in due course, several friendly and facetious responses, which ran much as follows: "Several of us have read 'Rebecca,' your play, and we don't really know whether it is a play or only a delightful evening's entertainment. We don't know how much or how little money there may be in it, but there is something fascinating about it; it's too good to let go by, and so we accept it."

The following summer and autumn, managers and playwrights bent their best efforts to the selecting of a cast, and early in the winter of 1909, "Rebecca" was put in rehearsal—that is to say, was laid on the table of that uncompromising clinic, Managerial Dissection.

The playwright's own description of this ordeal is most amusing. And it is of interest, too, as coming from one who has won many laurels in another literary field, is the recipient of the degree of Doctor of Letters, and is much in demand as a platform lecturer and responder to after-dinner toasts on both sides of the Atlantic. "I discovered at once that playwrights are of no importance whatever when it comes to rehearsals; they are merely necessary evils! Why, they cut out—very courteously, I confess—my most cherished scene of pathos, and clamored for 'fourteen laughs' in its place—or something to that effect!" she added, with a quick glance of merriment directed toward her listeners. "It would make a better story if the change had not improved the play; but that I am sure was only an accident!"

Here, however, as well as at every crisis in her career, Mrs. Wiggin's native cleverness and adaptability served her well; for with her, it amounts to a positive gift, the ability to seize and assimilate the other person's point of view, while gently but relentlessly imposing her own convictions upon her associates. In an incredibly short time she had acquired that extra "sense" which enables the playwright to project himself across the footlights and into the dollar seats, while deftly taking the pulse of the box-office! Feats, both of them, believe me, performed by Ibsen, Rostand and William Shakespeare! It must be done, or theatres close.

The ultimate outcome of an amicable compromise, always within the limits of art, was the "Rebecca" play, as produced for the first time in Springfield, Mass., on November 15, 1909; a monument to a great intelligence, willing to adapt its art instincts and creative impulse, trained in one school to a superior knowledge of stage-craft gained in quite another.

This adjusting of a play after it is put in rehearsal is, of course, customary. The late Clyde Fitch—most successful of American playwrights—virtually rewrote his plays in rehearsal, elaborating some parts and curtailing others, according to the abilities and requirements of the actors cast for them. One could almost state that a play not rehearsed by Clyde Fitch was a play not written by him, so necessary was it for him to see his work in action, before developing and completing it.

Kate Douglas Wiggin's personality and her work are amazingly alike, and must be the despair of her biographers, who, armed with butterfly-net and sensitive plate, pursue her darting, flashing, vibrant spirit, forgetting, however, in the breathless chase

MOLIERE'S LIFE AND WORKS

Prof. Brander Matthews Publishes the Book on Which He Has Been Engaged for Years

PROF. MATTHEWS tells us in his preface that forty years ago he first began to hope that he might one day be able to write a life of Molière. The hope, matured and developed, has borne good fruit. The book* is the better for being the product of a mature mind, mellowed and strengthened by much observation and many experiences, and being free from the mere enthusiasms of youth. Not that Prof. Matthews lacks wholesome enthusiasm. He is fond of his subject; the French dramatic stage has been the chief study of his career; many American students of the drama owe much to Brander Matthews in that branch. Molière stands very high in the esteem of his present biographer.

> Molière is in many ways the central figure of all French literature. He is the embodiment of certain dominant characteristics of the French people; in him we find its social instinct, its hatred of affectation, its lack of spirituality, its relish of the concrete, its girding humor and its dramatic ingenuity. But he is more than French, for his genius transcends the boundaries of race; it has the solid elements of the universal and the permanent.

When we add to that well-worded estimate Prof. Matthews's opinions that "Molière is the great master of comedy in its finest not less than in its broadest aspects" and that "the humorous fantasies of Aristophanes are not narrowly comedy—rather are they lyrical burlesque" (for it will not do to pass Aristophanes by without an accounting) we see that the biographer's ardor has not cooled in the forty years. Plautus and Menander (though Menander is only a name), Terence, Lope de Vega, Ben Jonson and Shakespeare must bow to Molière when comedy is the theme. Harpagon and Tartuffe are greater than Falstaff and Sir Epicure Mammon. It is the right mood, after all. The story of Molière is best told by one who gives him first place among writers of comedy and builders of the comic stage.

Prof. Matthews tells of the early life of Jean Baptiste Poquelin, his family and relations, his apprenticeship, briefly, and takes up each play, after the early ones of the formative period, in chronological order, concluding the book with chapters on "Molière the Man," "Molière the Dramatist" and "Molière and Shakespeare." Molière was born in Paris in 1622, early in the reign of Louis XIII. Corneille, Richelieu, the Marquise de Rambouillet, Milton, Calderon, Lope de Vega, La Fontaine, Pascal, Bossuet, Boileau, Racine and Louis XIV were among his contemporaries. His father was an upholsterer, one of eight appointed to look after the royal furniture. His mother was an upholsterer's daughter. The dramatist was born over his father's shop. There were five other children, and later, when his father married a second time, Jean Baptiste had two half-sisters. But none of these shared his glory. He was not sent to school until he was fifteen years old and it is assumed that he had then already served an apprenticeship to his father's trade.

There is evidence that he was familiar with the theatre and had seen the famous farce actors, Tabarin and Turlupin. In 1636 Molière entered the College de Clermont, the year of the production of "The Cid" and the publication of the "Discourse on Method" by Descartes. If Molière's theatrical taste had already been formed it was not discouraged by his Jesuit masters, who trained their pupils in the performance of classic drama. There is no record, however, of Molière's participation in such performances. At the college he formed friendships with Cyrano de Bergerac, Bernier and Chapelle, through whom he met the philosopher, Gassendi, then stirred by the theories and discoveries of Galileo and Kepler. Of Molière's schooling there is no further authentic record.

He may have studied medicine or theology, briefly; he may even have been admitted to the bar; Prof. Matthews imagines that Molière may have been traveling with the King in Southern France, as one of the valets de chambres tapissiers, (in place of his father), when the conspiracy of Cinq-Mars was discovered, for which that favorite of Louis was put to death. In fact, using the vague testimony of Grimarest and other earlier biographers, Matthews puts into words the fancy that Molière tried to conceal Cinq-Mars for a while. In de Vigny's romance, founded on this historical episode, both Molière and Milton are comparatively unimportant characters.

In 1643 the younger Poquelin had broken away from any learned profession he may have become associated with, from any connection with royalty, from the upholsterer's trade, and enrolled himself with a band of actors. Speculation as to the cause of his rash action is interesting but futile. He may, as Prof. Matthews says, have been influenced by a woman. He may have been impelled by his genius. He took the actor's calling, as it came to him, with all its hardships and privations. He called himself Molière—nobody knows why. One of his associates in the company of the Illustre Théâtre was Madeleine Béjart, who was twenty-five years old, red-haired, and had seen much of life. The troupe was one of a dozen strolling companies and not the most illustrious, in spite of its name. For twelve years Molière struggled with adversity, got into debt and paid the penalty. In 1653 Molière's first comedy "L'Etourdi," was acted. His troupe then called themselves "the comedians of the Prince de Conti." Three years later the "Dépit Amoureux" was acted. Soon the troupe bore Molière's name. He had long been its chief actor, and was now its dramatist. The experience, the contact with the world, association with rich and poor, virtuous and the reverse, broadened his talent. He knew the world. As an actor he had the advantage of much practice in all kinds of rôles.

Molière's first triumphs in Paris, in the reign of young Louis XIV, were achieved with the comedies he had produced in the provinces, the "Etourdi" and the "Dépit Amoureux." His associates were Madeleine Béjart and her sister, who called herself Mlle. Hervé, their two brothers, and some other actors of note. Prof. Matthews gives us a clear view of the French stage in that era. No other American writer of note understands this subject nearly so well. One is tempted to quotation again and again, but the temptation must be resisted. The analyses of the various plays of the master are coherent and interesting. From "Les Précieuses Ridicules" to "Les Femmes Savantes" no work of importance is neglected, and these chapters, full of ripe judgment and clear understanding, and marked by facile expression, make up the bulk of the book.

At the age of forty Molière married Armande Béjart, a relative of the theatrical family with which he had long been associated. It is not necessary to know the exact relationship. Prof. Matthews, having weighed all the conflicting evidence, calls her a younger sister of Madeleine. She was fully twenty years younger. She has been called Madeleine's daughter. This biographer denounces her slanderers. But he calls Armande "an enigmatic figure not easy to portray." She was fascinating, and Molière loved her. But she was the ordinary wife of an extraordinary man. The marriage was not happy. Molière survived it eleven years.

As a philosopher, Prof. Matthews likens Molière to Rabelais and Montaigne. His philosophy is "easy-going and tolerant; it does not expect too much from mankind; yet it makes the best of humanity as this happens to be." His intellect controlled his emotion, which accounts for a hint of hardness, now and then, in his character. But he was companionable, a man of many friendships. The book is illustrated with excellent reproductions of authentic portraits.

MR. GALSWORTHY'S "JUSTICE"

The Play That Is Bringing About a Reform of the British Penal System

JUSTICE* is a striking title for the play which so impressed the British Home Secretary that an investigation of prisons was ordered, and a consequent reform of the British penal system is impending. Perhaps much of the significance of the work must escape us in America; yet the final impression of tragedy has the effect of forcing one to dwell deeply on the great problem of criminality.

The play opens with a scene in the office of a respected and prosperous law firm. There is the father, a somewhat narrow, yet kindly man; the young son, touched by the modern spirit; and an elderly managing clerk, methodical, "a plain man," as he calls himself, limited, quaint, gentle, and intrinsically kind; and a junior clerk, Falder by name, a mere boy of 23, weak as many boys are weak, but not criminal as we now understand the term. Falder is in love with a married woman; their relations are innocent. The woman, Ruth, is tied to a brute, who beats her, whether he is drunk or sober. The laws of England chain her to this man, and the boy suffers in her suffering. One day she comes to his home, half-crazed, fearing for her life; her husband had strangled her almost to the death point. But he is not, by reason of that "almost," a criminal in the sight of the law. That day the boy raises a check, made out for £9, to £90, and plans an escape from the country with the woman and her children. The crime is detected, he is arrested and held in prison for two months awaiting trial.

The second act takes place in the court room, and the whole miserable story is brought out. Falder has confessed his guilt, and his counsel delivers an eloquent plea, ascribing the act to temporary insanity, induced by the story told by the woman on the morning of the day when the crime was committed. The plea goes deeper. Send this boy to prison, cries his counsel, and you have made a criminal of him forever. Show mercy to him, and he will retrieve his error and live a useful life among men.

> Gentlemen, justice is a machine that, when some one has once given it the starting push, rolls on of itself. Is this young man to be ground to pieces under this machine for an act which at the worst was one of weakness? Is he to become a member of the luckless crews that man those dark, ill-starred ships called prisons? Is that to be his voyage—from which so few return? Or is he to have another chance, to be still looked on as one who has gone a little astray, but who will come back? I urge you, gentlemen, do not ruin this young man! * * * He can be saved now. Imprison him as a criminal, and I affirm to you that he will be lost.

The counsel for the Crown retorts in a dry, logical speech; the Judge charges in lucid, legal remarks. The jury returns a verdict of guilty. The sentence is three years penal servitude.

The fourth act is divided into three scenes. In the first we meet again the old managing clerk, who, having called to see the boy, is moved to appeal to the governor of the prison. He cannot express his desires; he does not know what is wrong. He respects the law, but he knows, in his kindly heart, that Falder's case is desperate. He finds himself face to face with the law and is defeated, not even knowing that he has revolted. The Governor and the doctor are shown in the second scene, examining Falder, outside his cell. The doctor admits that the boy is in bad shape, but if he reports him—there are so many others! The quarters are inadequate. There is nothing specifically wrong with the prisoner—there is nothing to be done. One of the "criminals" amuses himself by beating his head against the door of his cell. Another makes saws to gain his way to freedom. Old-timers, these. Heavy doors clang, and the corridor is deserted. The third scene is Falder's cell, and is entirely in pantomime. The walls close in; the dread of solitude, the unnatural silence, the futile, foolish work of making buttonholes—the whole tragedy is there. The boy beats his hands against the door. There is no need for words.

The fourth act shows the law office, where the woman and the managing clerk meet again after two years. Falder is out of prison, a ticket-of-leave man. Ruth urges that he be given another chance. For herself she expects nothing, can give nothing. The merciless realities of life have swept her deeper and deeper into their mad whirl. She went back to her husband, and stayed until his brutality turned itself to her two children. Then she sold herself. Falder appears, ignorant of Ruth's position. His former employers are willing to aid him, but he refuses to give up the woman. Suddenly the truth as to her life is forced upon him. And when a detective enters, seeking him because he has failed to report regularly to the authorities, and because, as a "jail bird," he had forged references to secure work, he goes out—not to prison again, but to a merciful death. And so poignant it all is that the sentimental and almost childish remark of the old clerk seems utterly in keeping: "No one'll touch him now. Never again! He's safe with gentle Jesus."

And yet—not even Mr. Galsworthy can ignore the fact, so obvious as to seem almost trite, that society must be protected. Life is not a matter of theories, as men live it; it is a matter of facts. Undoubtedly one of the strongest points of the play is the argument it offers against England's present divorce law, which militates against the poor, who most need relief from intolerable conditions. Taking this concrete instance: had the woman, Ruth, been able to free herself from a brutal husband, the prospect of a happy marriage with her would have relieved Falder of the temptation to steal money for a flight to another country. But in its indictment of prison conditions the play proves little or nothing not accepted already in this country. It is not too much to say that our laws are more merciful; perhaps the temper of our people is more merciful. Our justice is not the ideal justice, and possibly here, as in England, the entire prison system is wrong. The modern thought is turning away from systems, and is concerning itself with humanity. The struggle is upward, and such plays as "Justice" range themselves on the side of the noble and the great.

As to its technical aspect, one can have only admiration for the method which thus reduces a great abstract problem to terms of the human and the concrete. The characters are visualized, each with the sure touch of a master. Stagecraft of the most subtle, because of the most appealing, type is evinced again and again. In the absence of exact knowledge as to the acting version of the London production, it can only be surmised that parts of the second act would be rather tedious to the average audience. In printed form the speeches of the counsel for the defense take up 178 lines, closely printed—about six pages, while the Judge's charge and speech on sentencing the prisoner take up over three pages, and the counsel for the Crown two pages more. It would seem that only exceptional actors, before exceptional audiences, would justify this daring method.

Yet the quality of the play is such that it makes for absorbing interest in the reading. If the direct issues are not calculated to appeal, because of different customs and habits of thought, to the average American, still the human appeal of tragedy overrides such boundaries and makes of the drama one of those poignant bits of literature which, touched by the far-reaching wings of the zeitgeist, belong truly to the greater and finer things by which we will have recorded our standing among the generations of man.

HUNTING WITH THE ESKIMOS

Mr. Harry Whitney Describes His Adventures Among the Happiest People on the Globe

By HENRY COLLINS WALSH

THE call of the wild is undoubtedly strong in the heart of the natural-born hunter. Despite civilized surroundings and influences, it seems easy for him to fall back upon primitive instincts and to adapt himself to the ways and methods of primitive man. It will be recalled that Mr. Harry Whitney went northward on the Erik, the auxiliary ship of the Peary Arctic Club expedition, in the Summer of 1908. He was not a member of that successful expedition, but was led to the frozen regions by the lure of the wild and his love of hunting and adventure. His original intention was to return home during the following Autumn with the Erik, but as he failed to realize an ambition to secure some musk-ox trophies during his Summer sojourn in the Arctic, he decided to remain for a year, and to give himself up to the delights of big-game hunting in the neighborhood of the pole. Thus the author braved the darkness and dangers of an Arctic Winter, and lived among the Whale Sound or Highland Eskimos throughout an entire year. These Eskimos are the northernmost people on the face of the globe, and doubtless about as near to primitive man as one can get. Except for the fact that explorers have taken to them guns and ammunition, which has altered their methods in hunting some of their game, the habits and customs of these people have probably not changed in the centuries, and no attempt has been made either to civilize or to Christianize them. They are an exceedingly interesting people, and Mr. Whitney seemed to fall easily into their ways of life, became one of them, in fact, shared their privations and dangers and lent his aid in their incessant struggle for existence. This struggle led him into many exciting hunting adventures; he realized his ambition in securing musk-ox trophies, and also, with his Eskimo companions, hunted for polar bear and walrus and narwhals, as well as for smaller game, such as the Arctic hare and eider-duck. Hunting in the Arctic regions is a serious business—a matter of life or death for both the hunted and the hunters. It means long jaunts with dogs and sleds, during which hardships apparently unendurable have to be borne, for semi-starvation and frozen faces and frozen feet are common occurrences, especially during the long Arctic night. Snow houses hastily constructed along the way are the only means of rest and shelter. Indeed, in no other region of the globe are such hardships to be encountered, nowhere else are the environments so hard and bitter and forbidding.

Yet, strange to say, perhaps nowhere else are people so cheerful and happy as the Eskimos. And Mr. Whitney's description of his life among these people is even more interesting than are his adventures in the chase. He tells us that it is an erroneous idea that the Eskimos lead an inactive life during the Arctic Winter; in all seasons they wage a constant fight for existence, hunting even in the black darkness, rejoicing at good luck and yet ever treating bad luck and disaster as a huge joke; living for the day and taking it happily, be it good or bad, and letting the morrow take care of itself. It seems to fit in with Emerson's theory of compensation that, at the top of the world, amid its bleakest surroundings, should live the cheeriest people on the face of the globe.

Mr. CHARLES HOLDER, author of "Recreations of a Sportsman on the Pacific Coast," has been invited to give an address this Autumn before the British Sea Anglers' Society.

THROUGH MONGOLIA

An English Traveler's Descriptions and Scholarly Observations

NOW that we are all expecting some day to ride through Mongolia in a palace car, with a "diner" attached, when we take that long-promised trip from St. Petersburg to Tokio, a really good book on the Land of the Brave* is very welcome. Mr. John Hedley does not believe in prefaces, so the personal, introductory note is lacking; but he takes you at once into his confidence, and you feel sure that he is going to tell both a straight and an interesting story, which he at once proceeds to do.

To those who are interested in Chinese history, this scholarly book will be particularly welcome, because the author is careful to tell you that this or that city was vitally connected with this or that person or event about which we have read. He translates all the native names and every page of his book has a human touch, for he does not put on the airs of an explorer, though he was a real and very effective one; but he shows you where, for example, the Emperor and Chinese court took refuge in 1861, when the French and British allies made Peking too hot for men who made treaties and then broke them. Following in his footsteps he tells you also about the famous teacher and missionary, James Gilmour, who did so much to make Mongolia known. Whether on the grass lands or up among the hills, he pictures vividly the descendants of Genghis Khan's rough riders. Incidentally, he shows how it was possible in those days, seven centuries ago or more, to overspread the earth with a horde on horseback, and how impossible it would be to-day, with modern methods of transportation and improved artillery, to do anything of the sort again. This is the land of horses and cattle, and when men travelled very much as Peary and his dogs did toward the Pole, where the man rode one horse and got his dinner from another — horse-flesh serving both as transportation and commissariat,—Mongol invasions of Europe were possible. Furthermore these Mongolian ponies, that are able to shovel off the snow in Winter with their snouts, could live where common horses would starve.

Many were the adventures of Mr. Hedley with dogs. The big, bony fellows, with long hair and shaped like greyhounds, were used in the chase; loud-voiced village dogs were not only noisy but vicious. It is better to be on horseback when you come near a house. Foot-passengers usually carry two sticks with them, one long one in the left hand to keep the dogs at bay, and a shorter and stronger one in the right hand to drop on Towser's nose if he ventures too near. As soon as their master receives you, however, their tails will wag welcome, and their concerts cease. But as soon as you put your foot outside the gate, war is declared again between man and dog.

Mongolia was the home of the theatre, and from the time of the Mongols, imaginative literature and the drama came into popular vogue in China. But the theatre, among the Mongols, is an affair of bamboo and matting put up and taken down for the occasion of the visiting troops of strolling players, who are very numerous.

Mr. Hedley, whom we take to be a missionary, visited the monasteries and made friends with the lamas. He writes very fully and interestingly about the pagodas and monumental edifices, for Mongolia is a stronghold of Buddhism. Altogether, he throws many interesting lights upon this land of dust-storms, monotonous life and lamaism. The map which he gives is of considerable scientific interest, and a good index reinforces this description of a country which furnished the name for one-third of the human race.

MISS SINCLAIR'S "CREATORS"

A Novel from Which We Learn Much About the Imaginary Writers of Wonderful Books

By CARTER IRVING

SINCE women have taken possession of the trade of novelist, those who write novels, it would appear from the latest fiction of Miss May Sinclair,* have begun to take their craft with portentous seriousness. They habitually—if Miss Sinclair is to be believed—think and speak of themselves and each other as "creators" and of their skill in their occupation as "genius"—a terrible thing which possesses them as "the Lord their God," and is jealous accordingly, which must be spoken of with awe, to which must be sacrificed the merely human good things of this life and even, as to Moloch, the little children.

Miss Sinclair won her own right to the title of novelist by writing a story about a poet—a particularly human Cockney poet—surrounded by a variety of vividly human folk, not in the least poetical. The women about the poet, in particular—described with equal insight and audacity—seemed types of the sex incarnate. Since "The Divine Fire" made her famous she has written several stories in which sex was an obsession, and republished several others with the same taint. Now she uses up over 500 pages talking shop—the novel-shop—or rather retailing solemnly the tea-table communings of the female novel writers' club. This gathering appears to differ in no essential from the sewing-circle it has replaced since woman has dropped the needle and taken up the pen.

For material she has assembled in one little coterie and packed into her book at least three of the transcendent literary geniuses of the age and several minor but not less authentic geniuses—two of them men and the rest women. Her fashion of stirring these rare ingredients is to have all the women geniuses fall in love with the biggest man genius (constructed to suggest the late George Meredith), and then perversely marry off the man to a servant-girl and mate the overshadowing woman genius to an editor with ideals and a large family. Naturally the pot boils like a very witches' caldron, especially as a consumptive poet and a hectic lady genius from Wales are thrown in for good measure.

The thesis (not quite original) is that books are born of pangs and travail like mere human children, and the conflict is the conflict of womanhood and literary "creation." Miss Sinclair develops the thesis with a wealth of detail and a courage of circumstance all her own, with an awful absence of the fear of becoming the solemn object of others' mockery attainable only by women given up to a passion or an idea. The heroine's novels move shamelessly on "in a procession of superb chapters," and these "tremendous books take it out of her so" that she resigns the care of her children and her husband to another woman. Earlier she shares in the "splendid obscurity" of the hero, who writes colossal masterpieces which the public refuses to read, who shuns "celebrity" as profanation and contemns popularity as defilement, who is the "greatest psychologist of his age," and who (according to the heroine) knows women (always excepting herself) "as God knows them"; who, finally, is described, even by captious critics, as writing with "large, undecorated splendour."

Miss Sinclair's society of authors is a stanch mutual admiration society. All, however, shrink from what Miss Sinclair is pleased to call the "little writing people"—newspaper folk who disperse fame to the populace and vulgarize it. All of them despise the pecuniary rewards of their trade—though all accept them; and all with one accord denounce the "literary taint." Yet the "literary taint" supplies the whole excuse and point of view of the book and most of its material. All of the coterie write "little masterpieces" (if they do not write great ones); their books are "terrible," like the blast of the lightning; where they lack extension they make it up in intensity. Also, the impulse to write these masterpieces and these terrible books is as a consuming fire. The poet (totally unappreciated, and a Celt) is accepted at his own valuation when he says: "I bring them the living body of God rejoicing with life, and they howl at me. What their own Wordsworths and Tennysons and Brownings showed them in fits and flashes, I show them in one continuous ecstacy, and they cannot stand it."

No wonder. The nature of ecstasy (imbedded in the syllables of the word itself) forbids that it be a continuing state.

Miss Sinclair's unshrinking frankness in revealing woman's feelings in poignant situations lends to an otherwise superfluous and almost impertinent narrative elements of considerable interest to the curious or pathologically inclined reader—an interest which is enhanced by her gift of telling phrases. But the fact remains that she deals with aspects of preposterous self-consciousness which are important (if at all) only to other novel-writers who imagine themselves geniuses.

A book all about the insides of geniuses—real geniuses like Napoleon or George Meredith or John D. Rockefeller—if it told the naked truth about them, would be immensely and horribly interesting to all of us. A book about the insides of a lot of writers who are not geniuses, but whose books we have all read, might also be interesting. But a book about an imaginary lot of writers whose tremendous or terrible books are equally imaginary, is another kettle of fish. Miss Sinclair's book is that kettle of fish. She herself is the only one of all her novelists and poets in whom we are genuinely interested, or of whose existence we are convinced. In so far as she betrays herself and the effect which being a more or less celebrated novelist has had upon her, the book is evidence. But no further.

There is just one saving possibilty which the sincerest admirers of that really fine book, "The Divine Fire," will cling to. It is a possibility, too, at which the subtitle "A Comedy," which Miss Sinclair uses here, may be argued to hint. It is this: The whole thing may be an elaborate piece of grim, cruel, unsmiling irony, with the woman novelists' club as its composite victim.

"THE BOB'S HILL BRAVES"

THIS story of the Summer outing of five typical New England boys in the West continues the adventures of Mr. Burton's popular Bob's Hill heroes. (Henry Holt & Co., $1.50.) Expecting to find the plains of Indiana still teeming with Indians and wild animals, these healthy, everyday boys call upon their imaginations to supplement the prosaic reality of Western ranch life. When Indians fail to materialize, the leading spirit of the group treats his chums to realistic hair-raising surprises; cows become buffaloes, vagabonds become desperadoes, and harmless bats become ghosts. This makes the book interesting, even to older folks, for a story portraying the unvarnished naturalness and native invention of ordinary boys sparkles of itself, when told faithfully. Books like this are well placed in the hands of youthful readers, for they encourage boys to follow natural instincts and make their own adventures even in the most commonplace environment. It is a story of the stamp which "Boy Scouts" will treasure, and Mr. Burton is to be commended in producing tales which will have the unstinted approval of lovers of real-boy fiction.

A VIVID MYSTERY STORY

WOOD LEVETTE WILSON

A story that piques curiosity by its peculiar mystery, and arouses vivid interest that is never disappointed. Beneath the surface of romance, with its strange but real revelations of that portion of the "seamy side" of New York which is glittering rather than squalid, there is an undercurrent of occultism. The dual personality of the man, the conflict between good and evil, is illustrated remarkably.

GAMBETTA'S LIFE AND LETTERS

A Brilliant Career That Ended While the Statesman Was at the Zenith of His Fame

THE translator of this new life of Léon Gambetta—whose tendency to floridity of style, by the way, does not conceal her earnestness of purpose—claims for M. Gheusi's work that it presents to the eager world the truth concerning two important events in that patriot's life. Gambetta did not blind his own right eye in his boyhood because his father would not remove him from the religious seminary at Cahors; and Mme. Léonie Léon did not first ruin Gambetta's life and then kill him. Well, Gambetta's hatred of priestcraft developed early, and his domestic life was always irregular. The cruel tale of self-afflicted blindness was never believable. Mme. Léon lived in security, and not without friends and money, until 1906. She seems to have been a woman of strong character. Gambetta and she were to have been married, but his sudden death intervened.

The biography in hand is largely made up of Gambetta's own letters. It contains no new and definite appreciation of the man. Perhaps none was needed just now. The Gambetta family is of Ligurian origin, and the great patriot's grandfather was a petty trader who settled, in middle life, at Cahors. He sold Italiote pottery and groceries in the market-place, and his business was inherited and developed by his two younger sons, Michel and Joseph, the latter the father of Léon. The future statesman's mother was Marie Magdalene Massabie. Léon was born on April 2, 1838. The registry books containing the authentic record of his birth are still in existence. There is no truth in the tale of any irregularity in his birth. He was in no way related to the Bonaparte family or any of its dubious offshoots.

Bombast was ever present in Gambetta's nature, but it was not inconsistent with sincerity of purpose and well-directed zeal in a good cause. After travels in the southernmost part of France and in Italy, with his father, and recording his youthful impressions of strange scenes in graphic letters to his mother and other members of the family, Léon, in his nineteenth year, went to Paris and took up the student's life. He had overcome many obstacles to his career by his persistence. His father wanted him to be a grocer, or if he must study law, to pursue his studies nearer home. The women of the family supported the youth's aspirations. The Mayor of Cahors took up his cause and argued successfully with old Joseph.

He was an extravagant youth; also a plausible one. He knew how to get around the old gentleman, but there were times when the wisely tempered generosity and patience of the elder Gambetta were exhausted.

Wearing ill-cut clothes, he was nevertheless an inspiring figure. The students called him variously Jupiter and Mirabeau. In 1859 he had passed his first law examination, had already won a little Parisian fame as an orator of volcanic utterance, and had begun to think of earning his own living. By 1860 he was a full-fledged advocate and deeply in debt. His father wanted him to return to Cahors and practice the law there. Léon had no idea of returning to a provincial life. Old Joseph condemned him as "a wine shop orator." But their differences were soon adjusted.

For a time Léon acted as secretary for various advocates of renown. He had already marched under the revolutionary flag. His first client was a revolutionary leader, and he took to writing for the radical newspapers. He visited London and the East. In 1863 he supported with his oratory Jules Favre and Prévost-Paradol in the legislative elections. His aunt Jenny, his mother's sister, was now the presiding genius of his humble apartment in Paris, and his affairs were in comparative order. His rise was rapid.

By 1866 the political horizon was growing blacker every day. Politics was Gambetta's main pursuit. His activities, however, were interrupted by serious trouble with his eyes. This was over by the Summer of 1867, when the fictitious gayety of Exhibition year was at its height. As advocate now, Gambetta's chief work seemed to be the defense of radicals accused of fomenting discord, and proceedings against newspapers which had condemned alleged revolutionary agents. He was, politically, Jules Favre's lieutenant. His great speech of Nov. 14, 1868, in defense of Delescluze, accused of inciting a riot at the tomb of the Deputy Baudin (who had been shot at the barricades at the time of the Coup d'Etat) was the turning point of his career. Thereafter he was famous. He had condemned the Empire. The "Procès Baudin" made him, though the man he defended thereafter became his enemy and denounced him in the era of the Commune as "an artful Genoese." In the letters of this epoch all of Gambetta's strong spirit, courage, and enthusiasm are revealed.

He was elected a Deputy (May 24, 1869,) from both Paris and Marseilles. He chose to represent Marseilles. He was ill at that time, and often thereafter. From the first he took his place with the opponents of the continuance of the empire. He deplored in a letter to his friend, Clement Laurier, the political inferiority of Rochfort, who seemed to him at that moment "invincible." It was at this time that the German gossips discovered that Gambetta was Napoleon III.'s nearest living relative, through his great-grandmother!

Gambetta's greatest services to his country were as Dictator of National Defense, Minister of the Interior, and head of the War Office in 1870-71. He was only thirty-two years old, and the most potent force in the young republic, born in pain and strife. When he took charge MacMahon's army had surrendered, Bazaine at Metz was about to capitulate, the siege of Paris was imminent. Gambetta never despaired. For three months he was absolute Dictator, and was always the stanch, self-sacrificing patriot. In the evil days that followed he escaped first to Bordeaux and then to Spain. In 1872 he returned to Paris to do his share toward the re-establishment of the republic, which still endured.

The biographer—a relative of the Gambetta family—deals gently and briefly with the amatory passages in Gambetta's turbulent, irregular life, and pathetically tells the story of his death in 1882. He is at great pains to correct the assertion, often made, that Mme. Léonie Léon shot Gambetta. A pistol exploded in the statesman's hand, wounding the palm. His death was caused by intestinal troubles. Gambetta was at the summit of a triumphant career.

Brief as that career was, Gambetta stands out in history as a splendidly heroic figure. He was likened in his time to Danton, who was, however, a much less impassioned and impulsive man. In fact, Gambetta was a man without a counterpart—emotional, unruly, disorderly, yet rising heroically to the requirements of great occasions. Much may be learned about him in this new book, though it does not aim to be a complete history of French politics in the Gambetta era.

*GAMBETTA: LIFE AND LETTERS. By P. B. Gheusi. Authorized translation by Violette M. Montagu. D. Appleton & Co.

LUTHER THE STATESMAN

A Book That Shows What He Accomplished as a Political Pioneer

MR. WARING has rendered a weighty service to history by his treatise on "The Political Theories of Martin Luther." However true it is that all political changes depend on the ebb and flow of religious ideals, it is seldom that religious and political reform are united under one leader, and nowhere do we find so signal an example of this dual championship as in the case of Martin Luther. Mr. Waring directs our attention to the political aspects of Luther's crusade as distinct from the religious. He shows us the extent to which the German reformer reversed the political theories of his day, the manner in which he grappled with the social and economic problems confronting the country—many of them still unsolved throughout our civilisation—and his success in establishing new ideals of government that have now become axiomatic. In fact, he creates for us a new Luther, and in place of the monk we see the statesman. But we must still decide for ourselves if the reformer such as Luther is the creator of the "zeitgeist," or merely the unifier and the spokesman of new national forces that would still operate, however incoherently, without him. But that question belongs to philosophy rather than to history.

It was Luther who freed the State from its dependence upon the Church, and asserted the divine right of kings as well as of popes—in itself a portentous revolution at a time when the Church claimed and exercised a temporal sovereignty over civilization and wielded the twin swords of government, exacting homage from kings and emperors. It was Luther who established the ancient Augustinian theory that rulers are the servants of the ruled, and must obey their masters. It was he who overthrew the old rule that the clergy were beyond the scope of the civil government, and insisted that the law of the land included all within its frontiers. Stanchly upholding the duty of obedience to governors, he was yet the greatest legitimiser of revolution. He was the founder of compulsory education and the creator of the modern free public school.

Of peculiar interest are Luther's theories on the problems that still confront us. The high price of living was as vital a question in his day as it is now, and even more vital since the sword was the natural arbiter of quarrels. He speaks of those who "buy up the entire supply of a certain article or ware in a country or city," in order that they may fix their own prices; and he says that princes and lords, if they wish to do their duty, should punish and stop it. Combinations in restraint of trade, adulterations, false weights, and all kinds of commercial deception must be similarly penalised, usurers must be regulated by law as "incarnate devils," common morality must be the object of coercive solicitude, and substantial justice must override custom and insure primitive human rights and the freedom of conscience. Luther was not merely the prophet of individual liberty. He was the veritable creator of the ideals of the modern States, and while some of these have been realized there are others that still beckon to their pursuit. Before Luther's day the middle and lower classes had no political rights, and all that they now possess came from him with the seeds of a greater growth still to come.

A valuable bibliography serves as appendix to a suggestive and illuminating work.

*THE POLITICAL THEORIES OF MARTIN LUTHER. By Luther Hess Waring. G. P. Putnam's Sons.

REBELLION IN FICTION

Lord Alistair's Rebellion by the Author of "The New Word"

ALLEN UPWARD'S new novel, "Lord Alistair's Rebellion" (Mitchell Kennerley, $1.50), is brilliantly illustrative of the recent tendency among English novelists to flout honest thinking and clean social living in the face, and to exploit the dry-rot of a individualism that recognizes no obligation to the social order and no responsibility between man and man. It is like the rebellion of adolescence against social laws, when adolescence happens to be plentifully gifted with superficial cleverness, but scantily endowed with ability to recognize the worth of other people's thinking. Mr. Upward's Lord Alistair is an incarnate mutiny against everything the rest of the world thinks worth while, against social laws, social obligations, social responsibilities. An author more interested in humanity for its own sake and less in theories and verbal cleverness might have made of such a rebel a figure that would compel the sympathy of the reader—as one cannot help loving Locke's "Beloved Vagabond," notwithstanding his soiled linen and his vagaries and his habit of going to bed with his boots on. But Lord Alistair, with his continual complaints that the world does not give him a fair show, and his childish attempts to strike back, is a repellent creature in spite of his scoffing wit. Like other characters in a number of recent English novels, he is the manifestation of the Mephistophelian spirit in its most up-to-date guise—the spirit that snaps at and ridicules the things that the rest of the world believes to be sane, clean, and beneficent, because they do not contribute to its own selfish enjoyment.

It is of no sort of consequence whether or not the author has made his plausible hero the mouthpiece of his own convictions. The yung derelict's ideas and theories are of interest merely as illustrating a tendency in English fiction, as mirroring, perhaps, an attitude toward society of a small section of Englishmen, and, in themselves, as an indictment of the present social order. The book, while it is not especially strong as a piece of fiction, except in the portrayal of two or three of the characters, evidences so much unconventional thinking and so much ironic understanding of human nature, and is written with such mordant wit and in so brilliant a style, that it will, without any doubt, find many admirers. It will be remembered that Allen Upward's philosophical work, "The New Word," attracted a good deal of attention some months ago.

"A MAN'S MAN"

THOSE who were happy enough to read "The Right Stuff," by Ian Hay, will welcome "A Man's Man" by the same author. (Houghton Mifflin Co., $1.20.) The later book has many of the characteristics of its predecessor—a peculiarly English atmosphere, a sense of the humor lurking in the common events of life, an apt way of putting things. It is, however, of very unequal interest, excellent in its account of affairs at the University of Cambridge, the "bumping race," etc., but with rather dreary stretches between its salient points. The description of Coney Island, at first amusing, is so long-drawn-out that one's smile becomes extinguished in a yawn. The story totters sometimes on the verge of impossibility, and its heroine goes the most forthputting American girl one better. It has not a few sparkling pages, however, of which the scene in the dentist's chair is especially good. Any reader possessing the art of judicious skipping will gather enjoyment from its page.

What's Wrong With the World?

to do more than admire, until lo, she is gone! And yet, as with all shimmering, gossamer expressions of nature, the virtue and power of this author and her work lie in just this subtle evasiveness, this persistent, darting flash, this gentle afterglow of fading mauve and gold.

It may be said of "Rebecca" and her author that they are not gay, nor sad, pathetic, dramatic, witty, nor wise, but all these—and more!

The play, like the books, is what the casual observer would describe as "simply a photograph of life in an old New England village," and it is quite true that we have all seen, and some of us known, folk like Rebecca's Mr. Simpson, Uncle Jerry, Miss Miranda, and Miss Jane. (These two always live together; it is necessary in order to produce the types.) But how much art is required to write out and then to stage such naive types few can realize. In its line "Rebecca" is a masterpiece. Though their setting is flowering uplands and meadows of sweet-mown hay, patches of phlox and borders of myrtle, it will be found that Mrs. Wiggin's New England characters have as poignant problems, as ardent loves and hates, as animate a fevered city. From beginning to end, and without one note of exaggeration, she has kept the whole play quivering with life; touching the imagination, kindling enthusiasm; breaking the heart with pathos, and mending it with mirth; until, long before the curtain falls on the happy ending, the characters and their story have become a part of our very being. To accomplish this, to master her medium, as Mrs. Wiggin has, allowing the thought to lift its voice clear and firm above the words, is to be an artist.

Apropos of the difference between written and spoken language, I recall something which Mark Twain said. It was in Vienna, and he was preparing to give a "reading" from his own works, in English. "Preparing," he emphasized this; "for I, nor no one else, can successsfully speak anything written for print. I have to change my written sentences into spoken sentences; altogether a different art." This from so "natural" a writer as Mark Twain!

To return to "Rebecca": it is now eleven years that she has been known in book form, to a large and enthusiastic public; her fame has crossed the Atlantic, and soon she is to be translated into French. But in all this vast number of "Rebecca" enthusiasts, not one has loved the merry, pathetic, adorable child, who grows into fair womanhood, and meets her Prince Charming, nor pities the poor Simpsons, "always a-movin' on," more than does the author of their being.

A cherished memory is that of Mrs. Wiggin reading from manuscript, as soon as the ink was dry, one of the "New Chronicles of Rebecca." It was in August, 1907, and the author was entertaining a house party at Quillcote-on-Saco, her Maine home, where, in a large and beautiful house, more than a hundred years old, (furnished in the period of its prime, and shaded by stately elms), she passes a part of each Summer, writing and welcoming her friends. Mrs. Wiggin always prefers to do her writing in the country, and one has but to see Quillcote to know that its mistress and nature are on the very best of terms; that is to say, each knows—and keeps—her place! The fields and all green, growing things, are allowed to advance intimately to the doorstep; the author knowing from long experience that they will never intrude upon her their ingratiating personalities, nor the details of their daily lives.

At Quillcote work and play alternate serenely to an obligato furnished by the Saco's rapids, whose pulsing energy has cut a deep bed for the river, forming a picturesque gorge some miles in length. There was a time when the study was the shade of an apple tree, but now a great desk, always in commission, stands in the paneled window niche of a low-studded room on the ground floor of a wing, to the right of the front door. It was not there, however, that we gathered to hear certain chapters from "Rebecca," but in the barn—and such a barn! It had been recently cleared and smoothly floored for village dances, and great, sturdy benches of old, weathered timber, placed against the walls. From the rafters hung huge wrought-iron lanterns for lighting at night, and on the small stage, occupying the space opposite the large double doors, a piano had been placed, at which Mrs. Wiggin has composed some of her charming songs. That afternoon the doors were thrown wide open, showing a lovely view of sunny, fragrant meadow, rolling, crescendowise, to the cool rim of a neighboring wood—Nature's drop-curtain! There, in Rebecca's own country, author and friends laughed and wept together over our heroine's finding a wedding ring for Mrs. Simpson, who, unlike all the other Riverboro ladies, had never had any!

Judging from her own statements, made from time to time, I should say that Mrs. Wiggin's stories grew quite naturally when the central idea has once taken definite shape. In the case of "Rebecca," the other characters were sketched in as the entourage of her vivid little personality. Later the possibilities of each type seized the imagination of the author and were developed afterward into the constellation of stars that furnish the "New Chronicles of Rebecca." This is why the play calls for an "all-star" cast; each character is "important," every line is, in all truth, "worth hearing"; there is no "padding," because there is literally no room for it.

Should you ask, "Did it all really happen in Maine?" I would answer, "It might have." I once put a similar question to Mrs. Wiggin concerning her "Tom o' the Blueberry Plains" in the village watch-tower collection. Her answer was, "Yes, there was a little witless lad who mended chairs and—that's his hut you see in the pasture off there," (we were driving at the time); "I used him as my theme, and then elaborated it."

It was in the same Summer (1907) that Mrs. Wiggin told us of Miss Charlotte Thompson's suggesting that there was a play in her "Rebecca" books. "I cannot see it myself," I remember her saying at the time, and it was rather under protest that she agreed to try it in collaboration. As Miss Thompson had had extensive experience in the dramatizing of books, it was her part to block out the play, arranging acts and scenes in accordance with the established rules of play building. Mrs. Wiggin's part was the actual writing of the play, for Rebecca, the play, was written as such; it is not merely the two books dramatized. By condensing the story and adapting it to the stage Mrs. Wiggin has emphasized its comedy and tragedy and brought into relief, as stated earlier, a rustic idyll—as notable a contribution to national drama as is Smetana's "Bartered Bride," Charpentier's "Louise," or "The Old Homestead." In point of strength "Rebecca" the play is much superior to "Rebecca" the book.

The desire to write a play had long possessed Mrs. Wiggin. It was merely the idea that there was a play in the "Rebecca" books that surprised her. Once mistress of the outline, she worked with ease and inspiration, aided by her natural love of the drama, long familiarity with it as a keen observer and sympathetic friend of actors and playwrights, and some practical experience gained as an amateur actress, when a younger woman. In fact, no less an actor-manager than Dion Boucicault, seeing her play in San Francisco, where she was then living, made her flattering offers to go on the professional stage. But it was as creator, not as interpreter, that Kate Douglas Wiggin was to charm, and in so doing help the world. And if motherhood in the ordinary sense of the term has been denied her, surely no one has given birth to more original, more bewitching, children of the brain and the heart than hers.

Mrs. Wiggin's knowledge of and practical experience with little children was gained when, as a young woman, she taught in a California kindergarten. She was in the habit of returning to the East to study during vacations, and on one of these occasions the school funds were at a very low ebb, and to reimburse them Mrs. Wiggin, then Miss Kate Douglas Smith, wrote "The Birds' Christmas Carol" and "The Story of Patsy." The first edition of each was sold at the kindergarten and had a great success. Later on Mrs. Wiggin, then a widow, happened to be in New York, when some one suggested her offering the printed stories to a regular publisher. Houghton Mifflin & Co. chanced to be the house selected, and they have published her books ever since.

Her literary début, however, antedates "Patsy" and "The Ruggleses," even the kindergarten incident, and when described by the author, is unforgettable.

It seems that her stepfather died, leaving a considerable amount of property. "But," as Mrs. Wiggin exclaims, "the town grew in the wrong and the unexpected direction. The property vanished and we needed money for the butcher and baker, so I decided to write a story for children and try St. Nicholas. I sent it off, and after a reasonable length of time began to watch mails from the East; my family watching them, too, which was much more nerve wracking! Finally my daily trip to the Post Office was rewarded. I was handed a letter bearing the stamp of the St. Nicholas editorial rooms. I opened it, my heart beating so that I could scarcely see or hear. There was the check; my story had been accept-

Here is a thoroughly interesting novel covering Europe in its rapid action and holding the reader delightfully absorbed every minute. The hero, a young American surgeon, after a temporary detachment of personality (to use the terms of modern psychology), much to his astonishment discovers himself a patient in a Turkish harem, cared for by a charming veiled woman, the superfluous and unnoticed wife of a local prince to whom she had been presented by the Sultan. Her husband, absorbed in his jealous first wife, had, in the phrase of the land, "never lifted her veil," even to discover her great beauty.

The romance that thereafter keeps the reader's nose constantly between the leaves, is of the most absorbing character. It is a story which will establish Mr. Hughes among the best selling novelists.

Automatic Cure for Poverty

Practical sociology; substitute for philanthropy. Book, 50c. on approval. Circulars free. ALDEN, Publishers, Neshanic, N. J.

ed! That was enough, and I flew home, delirious with the fever of first authorship. But the sight of home calmed me somewhat and reminded me that the family would be interested in the amount of the check. I could not remember quite, in my agitation, but it had looked like a dollar and a half. That was modest, but I did not seem to care much; for you see I was an author! However, I stopped and took it out of the envelope again, when—only fancy!—it was for a hundred and fifty dollars! And then I did a very human thing; I crumpled the check back into the envelope, with the formal letter of acceptance, smoothed the smiles out of my face, and entered the house. My mother spoke first: 'Of course, you didn't hear from St. Nicholas!' Then my sister: 'If you did, of course they didn't pay you anthing!' Their patience was losing its sweetness. 'Guess how much?' I asked, holding the letter up triumphantly. They guessed incredulously up to fifty dollars. But I kept on saying, 'Still more.' My sister burst in with the exclamation: 'We ought not to pay a single vulgar, sordid bill; we ought to use the money to raise a monument to Kate in the back yard!'"

That was the beginning, and to-day Kate Douglas Wiggin can claim an audience of half a million, and is translated into six languages.

Since in "Rebecca" the tides and undercurrents of human emotions of old and young are those that are common to all mankind, there would seem to be every probability of its invading not only England, but France and Germany, as Mr. Fitch's plays have done. We know that Mark Twain's humor and wisdom in dialect have made all the world laugh, and Mr. Dunne once told the writer of this article that "Mr. Dooley" had been translated into Russian. Hence, the translating of "Rebecca" for a foreign stage would seem easy, and those of us who have seen Rebecca alight from the stage on her arrival from Sunnybrook Farm, and lived with her in the quaint old village day by day, till Prince Charming wooed and won her, refuse to believe that any tongue, known or unknown, could even veil her charms.

Knowing Mrs. Wiggin's unusual conversational powers, and her brilliant repartee, which give her pre-eminence at any festal board she graces, it is always surprising to hear her assert that she can never think except through the medium of a pen or pencil. With truth she might add that, granted the pen or pencil, she cannot help thinking in literary form, as the following stories prove.

It was in 1898. We happened to be in London at the same time, and had arranged to meet for luncheon or tea. Mrs. Wiggin was leaving town the next day with her sister, and some one asked, "Where do you go?" "To a chicken farm down in Kent," she answered. "I am off for a rest, and I am telling no one my address, for the London season has quite worn me out." Did she rest? In her way, she did, no doubt, but on emerging from that chicken farm, after a short stay, she confessed to the completed manuscript of a new story, "The Diary of a Goose-Girl," for which a magazine paid her a thousand dollars down, and the book royalties from it are still coming in.

Again, when the round of social duties in New York had exhausted her, Mrs. Wiggin went to a sanitarium for a rest cure. All work was forbidden, and this in her case would seem to mean writing, of course. But soon a fever set in which baffled her doctors till the patient confessed in the following manner: "Doctor, which would you prefer, to have me write a little, or allow the last chapters of 'Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm' to remain coiled up in my brain in their present highly inflamed condition?" "Write it out at once, Madam; by all means get rid of it!" said her greatly relieved physician.

To gratify some of the playwrights, New York friends and admirers who had expressed regret that "Rebecca" was not to be given in their city until its second season, Mrs. Wiggin planned a theatre party last May for a matinée performance during its week in Bridgeport, Conn. Twenty-five of us made the trip from New York in a private car, were entertained at luncheon by our hostess, and guided by her to the theatre. At 2 o'clock not a seat was empty, and a tremor of unusual excitement agitated the house, for news had gone out that the author of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," the "Penelope" books, "Timothy's Quest," "The Old Peabody Pew," "The Birds' Christmas Carol," and all the other enchanting stories, was to be present. There were some who immediately recognized the features, the winsome smile, and youthful and modish appearance of the author; and these directed the attention of the audience to her box, where, in response to insistent applause, she rose after the third act and made a graceful speech. As she resumed her seat hundreds of handkerchiefs, large and small, fluttered like birds on the wing—"carriers," in fact, of delighted recognition, grateful joy and salutation!

"THE PRETTY GIRL PAPERS"

WERE there "beauty doctors" in Athens? Did the Queen of Sheba have one of her pack camels on her memorable journey loaded with complexion recipes and directions for taking care of the scalp on wax tablets? Did Hatasu have her scribes write down in hieroglyphics all the information she could collect about beautifying the hair and the eyes? It is likely enough, for confidence in the "beauty book" seems one of those secondary sexual characteristics as deeply rooted in women as even the desire for beauty itself. Though it varies its matter and its manner from year to year, in some form or other that book is always one of the stand-bys of the publishing business. What it has to say and the manner in which it speaks are always a truthful and fairly open sign of contemporary feminine character. The popular "beauty books" of any particular decade tell pretty plainly what sort of women lived just then. And it is significant that their matter and tone have changed a good deal in the last generation. The advice and the directions they give tend more and more away from artificiality and put more and more stress on the effects of living sanely, healthfully and usefully. Emma E. Walker's "The Pretty Girl Papers" (Little, Brown & Co., $1.25) treats the matter from this standpoint and gives to young women a great deal of very sensible advice about how to make themselves more attractive by proper care of the person. There are over thirty chapters, each one of which takes up a special subject and treats it expertly. Among the questions considered are the overcoming of nervousness, the girl in business, candy eating, the making of a beautiful mouth, and girls who come to pieces in public.

"A CHATEAU IN BRITTANY"

A CHATEAU IN BRITTANY, by Mary J. Atkinson, is embellished with sixteen illustrations besides a frontispiece. (James Pott & Co., $2.50.) The incidents of travel, the salient points of history, the comedy of observation in a picturesque and populous country, the lovely charms of art that is old yet keeps its aspect of innocence—these are enough to make a book readable, and this little account of a sojourn in Brittany, with a maid called Yvonne, in a château clammy but engaging, and with box-hedges twenty feet high, is extremely readable, precisely the book to take for deck reading if one's goal is France, or to taste before a Winter fire with the sauce of Summer memories. The writer has explored Dinan and St. Malo, Carnac and the ancient Auray, has read legends and histories, has noted types and made friends, and she sums up her impressions and information with a natural and easy grace and a not too insistent humor that give her book individuality and value.

"AN UNUSUAL NOVEL"

DAVID GRAHAM PHILLIPS
"deserves praise for picturing the complex character of this type of man; one who goes on and on, winning success in business, making money, more than he needs for ordinary purposes, only to hand it out to his wife, to whom he is apparently a human ticket-in-the-slot machine from which she grinds out gold to aid her aspirations."

THE HUSBAND'S STORY
"is an indictment of the class of people in this country who are dazzled by the apparent brilliancy of high life and titles until their blindness destroys their reasoning power to determine between the real and the artificial in life."—The Boston Globe.

JULIA WARD HOWE

IF Mrs. Howe cannot be regarded as the typical American literary woman, it is because no such rôle has yet evolved; the conditions have been too complex and too fluctuating. She certainly was of one among several American types, and of a very interesting and engaging one. She was a woman of unusual mental gifts, and her training, experience, and associations were favorable to their development.

There was a touch of genius in her family, as those will recognise who recall her brilliant brother, and it was quite as much social as individual with her as with "Sam." She had prodigal fairies by her cradle, and wealth, consideration, study, travel, intimate intercourse with eminent persons, as well as personal beauty and charm, were her dower. She had the thirst for literary acquisition and production from early youth, and was "getting printed" anonymously when she was but seventeen. She made her ventures willingly and even boldly on then little-known seas, studying eagerly and closely German philosophy and poetry, Italian poetry and romance and music and the passionate current French at the period when romanticism and radicalism were at their full tide. At her childhood home Irving and Halleck were friends, and after her early marriage to Dr. Howe her house was one of the centres of the varied and distinguished Boston company of which Longfellow, Sumner, Parker, Ticknor, Holmes, Agassiz, Phillips, Lowell—to mention but a few—were members. With her husband she spent much time in Europe, at intervals, and there her associations were of like rank and still more varied, embracing much that was best in the world of letters and art—Carlyle, Grote, Sydney Smith, Henry Hallam, Dickens, Florence Nightingale.

From the first the range of her writing was remarkable, and her output, despite the cares of family and society, was continuous. She worked regularly on The Commonwealth, the anti-slavery organ, of which her husband was the editor. She wrote verse readily—graceful, tender, with touches of refined fancy, and sometimes with humor. She wrote essays on education, philosophy, religion, literature, society and manners. Her husband said of her that she did not read much but studied a great deal. Yet the lighter Germans in prose and poetry were as familiar to her as Hegel and Kant. She had a good musical education, and was a keen and elaborate critic of music.

With all these accomplishments, gifts, tastes, had she lived in London she would have been the centre of a literary society, and in Paris, even in the last half of the nineteenth century, she would have had her salon. But in Boston, during her distinguished husband's life and after his death, literature, much as it engaged and fascinated her, was not her chief interest. She was early caught in the complex of "movements" that prevailed in that curious and busy-minded community. In some of these she was enlisted in sympathy with her husband. These were chiefly philanthropic, for Dr. Howe's mind was the reverse of speculative. His wife, reared in a strictly orthodox family in New York, once released from home restraints, and tasting the new wine of Boston radicalism, was more varied and extreme in her intellectual adventures. She was a close friend and ardent admirer of Theodore Parker, and when her husband protested against his children attending services marked by so little outward reverence as those in Parker's "meeting-house," she betook herself reluctantly to the ministration of James Freeman Clarke, who was hardly less heterodox in teaching, though less startlingly informal. But Mrs. Howe retained a fervent Christian faith, and spoke for it frequently.

Later, Mrs. Howe added to her interests educational reform, prison reform, woman suffrage, and the development generally of woman's sphere of activity. An ardent opponent of slavery before and during the war for the Union, she took an active part in the anti-slavery agitation. It is significant of the subordinate part mere letters had in her life, that of all her voluminous writing, "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" is the one product that has survived, and this is sure of remembrance for long years yet. It was, as she relates, the fruit of a transport of emotion, and it embodied in noble lines a passionate sentiment with which millions of hearts were swelling. All the sense of the blasphemous wrong of slavery, of pity for its victims, of love for the country whose life hung in the balance, sang through the lofty measure. It turned a doggerel camp song, literally, into a battle-hymn. It was, in very truth, an American folk-song, and the Nation well may mourn the passing of its writer.

OUR AUTUMN BOOK NUMBER

THIS REVIEW celebrates its fourteenth anniversary by the publication, to-morrow, in connection with the Sunday issue of THE NEW YORK TIMES, of its Autumn Book Number. A notable feature of this special number will be a carefully classified list of nearly one thousand of the more important publications appearing between July 1 and December 31 of the present year.

Besides this valuable guide to the new books of the season there will be numerous articles of timely interest by well-known writers. Among these may be mentioned a study of the later heroines of Maurice Maeterlinck, author of "The Blue Bird," etc., by his wife, Mme. Georgette Leblanc Maeterlinck, the distinguished actress; "Literary Bird-Shot," by Prof. Brander Matthews; "George Sand's Last Days," by Theodore Stanton; "Seven Great Statesmen," by H. W. Boynton; "A Grapple in the Dark," by Dr. Cyrus T. Brady; "Louise Chandler Moulton," by Hildegarde Hawthorne; "The Kingdom of Light," by George Record Peck; "The Virginia Gentleman," by Carter Irving; and "Literary Notes from Paris," by Alvan F. Sanborn.

LITERARY NOTES FROM LONDON

What's What and Who's Who in the English Book World at the Present Time

LONDON, Oct. 12.—There is one respect in which a country with centuries of literature behind it, is better off than a young country—it has more sources of literary gossip. We chatter about the living authors, saying that so many copies of their last books have been sold—small talk. But all gossip, which is quite a different thing, about the great dead authors—gossip lovingly or curiously about them. The thought is suggested to me by the announcement, which I see in some Autumn publishing list, of a book entitled "The Key to the Brontë Works."

The author is Mr. John Malham-Dembleby, who, so far as I know, is new to authorship, only that, like "the flowers which bloom in the Spring, tra-la," has "nothing to do with the case." The book, we are told, will show that Charlotte Brontë, but not Emily, wrote "Wuthering Heights." It will, we are further told, lift the "veil in regard to Charlotte Brontë's life at Brussels, and her friendship with M. Hèger, the original of her chief heroes." You may sniff sensation there, no doubt, but when we are assured that the coming book will place more than "sixty years of writing on the Brontës, quite out of date," why, we say to ourselves, "Let's wait and see." The Scots have a saying to the effect that the proof of a pudding lies in the eating of it, and that applies very particularly to the sensation literary.

There will, one may safely prophesy, be no literary sensations in the biography of that great Englishman, John Bright, which is at last being got under way. He lived in the full light of the world, a simple man, and from that circumstance he derived much of his popularity and authority as a statesman. During the past year or so Mr. Barry O'Brien, who wrote Parnell's life, has been engaged upon a "monograph" on John Bright, and it is now due for publication, with a preface by Mr. Augustine Birrell. But this is not the full, authorized biography of the "Tribune," as Bright, for his eloquence and influence, was called. That is to be done by Mr. George Macaulay Trevelyan, the son of Sir George Otto Trevelyan, of course by desire of Bright's family, who have all his papers. The literary gifts of his relative, Macaulay, and of his own father, have come down to young Mr. Trevelyan, as witness his brilliant book on the Italy of Garibaldi. With the biographies of John Bright, Benjamin Disraeli and Gladstone in our hands, we shall have a very ample personal account of British politics during the past two generations.

The strange, not to be fathomed ways of the British book-buyer and reader—and I suppose of all book-buyers and readers—have just been illustrated by a further little "boom" in Morley's "Gladstone." It has sold an endless number of copies, first at two guineas, next at half a guinea, and lastly in the "Daily Chronicle" special five shilling edition. Some 42,000 of this people's edition had been sold up to the middle of September, leaving only 8,000 to sell, a mere process of time, for the "Gladstone" has enduring vitality. "But," somebody suggested, "why not offer such copies as remain on the instalment system—a shilling down, the rest in four monthly instalments of a shilling each—and see if there be not yet another public for Lord Morley's book." Well, you would have thought that a reader wishful to have it, would also be able to pay five shillings in one sum for it. But it was decided to give the possible new public the benefit of the doubt, and on the instalment system the "Gladstone" has been selling merrily at the rate of a hundred copies a day. The point of interest in the venture, for the English book trade, is that so low-priced a book has not before been tried here on the instalment system.

We have had one or two examples recently of the triumph in sale of the "sweet novel," for instance "The Rosary." Its successor, "The Mistress of Shenstone," and Miss Myrtle Reed's "Master of the Vineyard," have also started off very well. Even so the English publisher, for some reason or another, hesitates about accepting "sweet novels." Perhaps he fears that they may drag him back to those awfully good Victorian days, when every heroine married happily before she was "sweet and twenty." There is a comment on this in the experience which, as I hear, a well-known English woman novelist has had with a new story. It is a healthy, straightforward love story, simple sentiment and romance, and no nonsense. It went all round the English publishers, and in weary succession they begged to be excused—they would not have it. Then the author took it to an American firm which has a house in London and the novel was quickly and heartily accepted.

JAMES MILNE.

AMONG THE AUTHORS

GEN. HOMER LEA'S "The Valor of Ignorance," with an introduction by Lieut.-Gen. Chaffee, dealing with the possible Japanese invasion of the Philippines and our Pacific Coast, has been taken up by army officers and a demand for the book is shown especially in Manila.

SIR FREDERICK TREVES, Bart., Sergeant-Surgeon to King Edward, whose book describing a leisurely tour of the world, "The Other Side of the Lantern," has recently appeared in a new edition, has had an interesting career. A country doctor owning a precarious practice, his writings on surgery soon promoted him to lecturer at the London Hospital. He was the first to practice the new surgical cure in England for appendicitis. In 1902 he performed the operation on King Edward which undoubtedly saved the sovereign's life; and for this he was created a baronet. Now retired from active work, Sir Frederick devotes his time to travel and writing.

PROF. ARTHUR L. FROTHINGHAM, the archaeologist and writer on architecture, is at present in Norfolk, Conn., bringing to completion the last volume of "The History of Architecture," projected by the late Russell Sturgis.

WILLIAM II of Germany has acknowledged the receipt of a copy of Prof. A. B. Faust's volume, "The German Element in the United States," which recently made its appearance. Prof. Schofield of Harvard, author of "Studies on the Libeaus Desconus," is to lecture before the University of Copenhagen in 1910-1911 on "Chivalry in English Literature." Prof. Henry Lewis Cannon, of Leland Stanford, Jr., University, author of "Reading References in English History," has become Associate Editor of the History Teachers' Magazine.

Mrs. WILLIAM SHARP, having spent a few weeks at Intervale, in the White Mountains, is now visiting friends in this city, where she has seen the "Life and Letters" of her late husband through the press.

Mr. WILL N. HARBEN, whose new novel of homely Georgia life, "Dixie Hart," was published last week, is the subject of an article by William Dean Howells in the North American Review. Mr. Howells thus sums up his estimate of the Harben novels:

> His people talk as if they had not been in books before, and they talk all the more interestingly because they have for the most part not been in society, or ever will be. They express themselves in the neighborly parlance with a fury of fun, of pathos, and profanity which is native to their region. Of all our localists, as I may call the type of American writers whom I think the most national, no one has done things more expressive of the life he was born to than Mr. Harben.

KATE LANGLEY BOSHER, author of "Mary Cary," has returned from a motor trip through England and Southern France. She is now at her home in Norfolk, Va. Her story of the little orphan girl is to be brought out in a new gift edition this Fall.

Mr. REX BEACH has been for the last three months in New York, working on a successor to his last novel, "The Silver Horde," and is now preparing to go to New Orleans. He will spend November and December there, and make his fourth Alaskan trip next spring.

PROF. RUDOLPH CHRISTIAN EUCKEN, whose new book, "Christianity and the New Idealism," has just been published in this country, is considered the leader of the new school of idealists to which Prof. Josiah Royce of Harvard, Prof. Harold Hoeffding of Copenhagen and others belong. He was born in Aurich, a small town in Prussia, January 5, 1846. He has been professor of philosophy at Jena since 1874. Prof. Eucken received the Nobel prize for literature in 1908.

Mrs. ELINOR GLYN, author of "Three Weeks," wrote last Winter a novel which she called "Gritzko"—that being the name of the hero. When the book was accepted for publication in this country the author was cabled for permission to change the title to "His Hour." At first Mrs. Glyn thought it would be better to call the book "When His Hour Came." Later, however, she accepted the title suggested by the American publishers, and her English publisher cabled over the request that a note be printed in the American edition saying that "His Hour" is called in England and Russia "When His Hour Came." But presently Mrs. Glyn decided that the title selected by the American publishers was by all odds the best and adopted it.

GERMANIC HERO LEGENDS

Four New Books in Which Famous Old Stories Are Retold

FOUR new volumes of Germanic hero-legends come to us together.* Their substance is immortal, and if none exhibits actual genius in narrative, all show a skill in style and general presentation that is commendable.

Beowulf was mightiest among Anglo-Saxon heroes, and lent his name to the monument of Anglo-Saxon poetry. Sir Gawain was the early favorite of all the knights of Arthur, and inspired the flower of English romance. Prof. Cox presents the essential narrative of their respective stories in a form adapted for schoolboys' reading.*

Mr. Pyle's attractive volume is the last of four in which the artist has retold in prose and picture the whole story of Arthur and his knights. This volume gives the legends of Sir Geraint, Sir Galahad, and the Passing of Arthur. Mr. Pyle's phrasing is quaint without obscurity, and his numerous drawings are abundantly suggestive.

The fullest, if not the most fascinating, of the collections is Mr. Ebbutt's.* His tales are chosen with a social as well as a purely narrative interest; he selects what he believes the most characteristic story or stories of the various peoples whose blood is commingled in the veins of modern Englishmen. The Anglo-Saxons are represented by Beowulf, the early Christian influence by Constantine and Elene, the Danes by Horn and Havelak, the Norman-French by Roland, and the Irish by Cuchulain, while the tales of Gamelyn and Robin Hood and Hereward the Wake are among the rest. The book is generously illustrated.

We know of no better stories than these, and we commend the books containing them. For a century and more Germanic myths have been aspiring for the esteem that polite people used to lavish rather on the Greek mythology. The revival of our own ancient literature constituted a great part of that "renascence of wonder" which a living critic considers typical of the baptism of fire that English poetry received in the days of Coleridge and Keats. It is true that an age of reason has succeeded that age of wonder, and that when we have our thinking-caps on we no longer look upon the mediaeval period naively. We have exploded its marvels and explained its literature. We know that its people were as purely human and its happenings as purely humdrum as ourselves and our daily histories. All this is consistent with the wearing of thinking-caps. Meanwhile, there are the old romances, still potent with enchantment for the hardiest scientist off duty. For then he takes them as he takes a dream; the magical is verisimilar, the fantastic and kaleidoscopic are probable, the Quixotic is admissible and admirable, the impossible is natural and expected, in this dream.

In our fourth book* something of a similar veil of marvel is thrown over the histories of some comparatively recent heroes. Mr. Jacob A. Riis tells the stories of twelve great historic figures of his native land—Kings and Bishops, Generals, Admirals, scientists. It is not unfitting that these interesting Danish stories should come to us with the others. Beowulf was an heroic exemplar among the Danes before his deeds were told in Britain. There are those who think that the monster whom Beowulf conquered was only the personification of a dread disease that scourged the North. And the last hero of Mr. Riis—as like Beowulf in magnanimity as he was unlike him in modesty—also delivered his people from a ravaging malady. Beowulf's fiend was represented as a half-human monster; the disease that Dr. Niels Finsen conquered was popularly called "the Wolf."

THE COUNTRY CHURCH

A DEEP stirring of interest in everything that concerns life in the country becomes every day more manifest. Many people are thinking, talking, writing, and even taking action not only about the betterment of farm methods but about the improvement of country schools, social life and churches. To this last section of the discussion the Rev. J. O. Ashenhurst, who has been for many years a country pastor in Ohio, makes an interesting addition in "The Day of the Country Church," (Funk & Wagnalls Co., $1.) He believes that "day"—the time of its greatest opportunity—is just opening for the country church, and that, instead of being, as some have asserted, a thing of the past, "it is a factor of increasing importance in the combination of forces that are operating for the uplift of the rural districts in social and religious life." Mr. Ashenhurst has worked out, from his practical experience, many outlines and suggestions of methods by which the country church can make itself an important factor in the development of country life and in the upbuilding of character among the young.

"GREAT CITIES IN AMERICA"

TO see ourselves through the calm, unprejudiced eyes of a careful investigator of Mr. Delos F. Wilcox's recognized ability is a treat rare indeed. In a volume written with no motive other than the uplift of our great American cities, and with no slightest suggestion of the yellow journalist's striving for effect, we may read of the shortcomings of "our own home" cities without resentment, and of those of our sister and rival cities with sympathy. Indeed, one might suspect that "Great Cities in America" (Macmillan Co., $1.25) owes its authorship to one from without. Its clear, sane, discerning exposition of the political status and conditions of our seven chief municipalities ranks, comparatively, with Bryce's "American Commonwealth." New York, Washington, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, and St. Louis are, in turn, subjected to a keen analysis of government and organization that will prove of inestimable assistance to the student of municipal affairs. Written clearly and forcibly, it should also prove a welcome addition to the libraries of our "self-thinking" voters, assisting them materially in approaching intelligently the serious problems that now confront the denizens of all of our great cities. It offers an opportunity for the comparative study of American city governments heretofore unavailable.

Lastly, and above all, the book is a model of comprehensive brevity, plainly and logically presented and well arranged for easy reference. The economic situations and problems involved are unencumbered with the pedantic mazes which often render a popular work, such as this is bound to become, vague, obscure, and valueless. Mr. Wilcox's familiarity with the chief one of the seven cities of which he writes may be assumed from the fact that he holds the post of Chief of the Bureau of Franchises, Public Service Commission, New York City. His first book on city government was published thirteen years ago.

A BOY'S DREAM ADVENTURES

ONE could wish that the modern writers of children's stories might discover some device for introducing grotesque adventures other than going to sleep and dreaming. Why not, for instance, let a child dream while he is wide awake, as plenty of little people do? Then we could dodge the ever-recurring goings-to-bed and wakings-up which mar a pleasant story like "The Dream Adventures of Little Bill" (Broadway Pub'g Co., $1.25), by Edmund K. Goldsborough, Jr. Almost invariably these descriptive portions of the book are heavy and tritely phrased, while the dialogue is light, sprightly, ingenuous. The imaginative quality in the conversations of little Bill with the bald-headed eagle, the chipmunks, the snails, the Man in the Moon, and the other dream creatures, goes far toward making amends for the stiffness in the joints of their settings.

"THAT FRESHMAN"

THAT FRESHMAN" (D. Appleton & Co. $1.50,) whose co-identity with the author, Christina Cabrevas, is frequently suggested by her highly developed literary proclivities, will entertain a large circle of Mount Holyoke's friends and graduates by her hare-brained escapades. This is one of the stories of college life that is based on the actual happenings of a college year, heightened but slightly—merely enough to maintain interest throughout. Helen Ware, the impulsive fresh-"man" around whom centres the interest and shower the girlish misfortunes of a first year at Mt. Holyoke, wins our affection in the early moments of the story. Hers is the picture of a high-spirited, naive, whole-hearted girl, whose innocent conceit we readily condone in return for the amusement her endless escapades afford us. No elaborate plot is attempted. The story progresses spasmodically, now with a romp and a frolic, again more sedately and primly, with our heroine dispensing prim, precise, pedantic—but purely feminine—locutions to save us from forgetting that this is really a "story." Tears are abundant, but the frolic and fun are all the more strongly relished on their account. The offerings of verse and set political speeches with which the story abounds are somewhat too copious. But these awkwardnesses are quickly forgotten, and we retain with pleasure the pictures of lovable, true and noble girls such as our New England colleges are proud to develop.

VIEWS OF READERS

Mr. Maxim's "Science of Poetry"

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

I come begging space for the following anent Mr. Littlefield's criticism of Hudson Maxim's Book, "The Science of Poetry and the Philosophy of Language."

A man who thought himself so well up on natural history and other things that there was not another word to be said, not another thing to see, visited a rather extensive zoo and for the first time found himself in the presence of a giraffe. Inclined to run at first, he remembered himself and stood his ground while he contemplated the creature, puzzled. Then, with a derisive chuckle and a wise wagging of the head, he walked away. "Something wrong with that thing," he said, "for I know there is no such animal."

The attitude of Mr. Littlefield toward Hudson Maxim's great book, "The Science of Poetry and the Philosophy of Language," is a strong reminder of the wise man and the giraffe. Mr. Littlefield seems never to have heard of a scientist who knew aught of anything not connected with his retorts, his crucibles, and cupels; for the first time he beholds "a powder man"—a great powder man, he is willing to admit, but a powder man—afield with Pan, trampling down the sacred cornstalks of Consolidated Divine Afflatus Limited, and he is hard put to understand it; he sees him blowing up the stumps and boulders of poetic tradition and he is aghast; he sees him plowing great furrows up and down and around the slopes of Parnassus and he is outraged. "What is he doing up there?" he screams. "He belongs in the valley!" Then he hobbles away, chuckling wisely. "It's all right," he says, "he isn't up there at all; there's no way for him to mount the heights; there's no such thing as a powderman-poet!"

As a matter of fact, Mr. Maxim has mounted the heights; in his book, primarily a treatise on the artistic expression of thought, he has given sufficient evidence of poetic feeling and power to entitle him to a secure place as a poet; as such his criticism of generally accepted standards and his formula for poetry-making and poetry-judging are entitled to respectful and careful consideration. He is no longer the high explosive man, the scientist; his thesis had given him his degree and at the end of his book he is the philosopher, the poet, the man of letters.

It is failure to beat back surprise, reluctance at parting with precious prejudices, conviction that no good can come out of Nazareth, that is confounding the hobble-skirted Walter Littlefields and making them, as in the case of Mr. Maxim's book, unfair critics. A criticism which shows in every line that it is bound down and walled in by prejudice is utterly worthless.

Your reviewer seems to have approached Mr. Maxim's book with the firm resolve to rebuke its author as a trespasser, an interloper in the realm of literature; indeed, he uses the word trespass, and he holds to his purpose so faithfully that at the end of his pronouncement he has found no good thing in what the world has already accepted as at least an earnest and comprehensive effort for order and dignity in the expression of thought. In seeking to discredit him on the ground that he is a scientist and can know nothing of poetry and language, Mr. Littlefield forgets that the very qualities that made Hudson Maxim a scientist, a passion for exact order and a genius for analysis—characteristics of all the Maxims—peculiarly fitted him for the thing he has done.

After a more or less academic handling of Mr. Maxim's book, in the course of which he himself shows that he utterly fails to differentiate between poetry and verse, Mr. Littlefield reproduces "L'Apache," a strong poem of the "Man With the Hoe" order—one of Mr. Maxim's best examples. Of it Mr. Littlefield says:

> These lines scan; they are also plentifully supplied with figures of speech. But, alas! they are not poetry, and among them there is just one line of genuine verse. * * * They do not sing.

Your critic may be honest; perhaps they do not sing for him, but he has already shown that his receiving harp is out of tune, and it is not surprising that he has missed their music. "L'Apache" does sing; it bursts out loud, strong, reverberant, and moves along through lines astounding in their force and clearness to a finish in what a great writer has pronounced one of the most terrific lines in our common tongue. All great lines sing; it is a part of their greatness; the notes sound as the lines rise and fall on the scale of meaning, and the music cannot be smothered save in the blankets of prejudice and blind ignorance.

Whether or not Mr. Maxim's poetry, as he offers it in support of his theories, is of the fabricated kind as opposed to the divine inspiration kind, I am not prepared to say; I am, however, backed by all poetic tradition in the statement that it is great, genuine poetry. In his book, Mr. Maxim offers a greater number of really great lines than can be found in any modern poet's like volume.

It is noteworthy that in offering his work of analysis, criticism and guidance, Mr. Maxim at the same time proves himself poet and philosopher, competent for the task, delightfully familiar with the tools and the clay. He qualified as a poet before entering the lists; it would be well if some of the Littlefields should qualify for something or other in like manner.

A Contemner of Queries and Answers

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

For years I have been amazed at the weekly presence of your two pages of "Queries and Replies" in the Literary Supplement. My wonder has now boiled over into a demand for an explanation. Please do not print this letter in those deadly columns, for there no questions are ever answered except the easy ones, whose replies can be furnished by "Familiar Quotations" or the "Golden Treasury" or "Who's Who." It is not enough for me to see my question in print; I am not one of those asinine querists who find in those pages their only possibility for literary achievement. I desire information, not mere expression.

Who are these effeminate old bachelors and anaemic old maids who are continually whining for their lost doggerels? Why do they want to know the author of

Little Katie, one April morning,
Went to school with her brindle pup?

What do they do with these neglected effusions, when, if ever, they find them? Can't these vegetarian rhyme-collectors be satisfied with their yellowing scrapbooks, without usurping two pages of a modern literary paper? Why is it that your pages must furnish a clearing house for superannuated poetasters? Is there, in heaven's name, nothing to be inquired about but silly, old-fashioned newspaper verse? Who, I repeat it, are these curious old fogies who are so madly anxious to chase a well-lost and deservedly forgotten bit of rhymed narrative forever and ever through your sheets?

I can read Beatrice Fairfax's "Advice to the Lovelorn" with relish. Here, at least, is something interesting—hearts eager not to commit a sentimental solecism, lovers who would not be too bold, maidens who would be shy but successful. I can pick up the "Confectioners' Journal" and get an edifying bit of information about "banana splits" and "pineapple temptations." But of all trade papers it seems to me the literary trade journal is the dullest; and of them all, these "Queries and Answers" prove most conclusively that the pursuit of literature should be confined to the curriculum of established asylums.

Must this go on? Is it still worth your while to receive as contributors two pages of these silly old people who babble of mislaid poems? Mr. Editor, Cut It Out! The genealogical page of the Boston Transcript is exciting compared to these verse-hunting drivellers. One can read the doings of Women's Clubs and keep awake—but these accomplished idiots! Perhaps they inquire for their own poems, seeking to resurrect a long-lost fame—who knows! Perhaps these queries contain secret ciphers, and enable burglars or eloping couples to communicate with each other. This is the only charitable explanation; I wish I might accept it. Perhaps—

But at least if these things must be, you might save much time and money by merely reprinting last year's Queries in their order. This would please the correspondents—and no one else would ever know the difference.

GELETT BURGESS.

New York, Oct. 19.

[We have always known that Mr. Burgess—creator of the Goops and word-painter of the Purple Cow—was a humorist; but in this communication he shows himself to be an inhumanist, a hater of his kind. To suppress the department of Queries and Answers in THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS would be to cause nation-wide unhappiness. We doubt that any department in any other periodical in the United States has been the source of so much solid satisfaction to its readers as this. Suppress it? It would be infinitely more humane to suppress Mr. Burgess himself!]

"The Trials of Five Queens"

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Such productions as R. Storey Dean's "The Trials of Five Queens" are apt to be taken as reliable works of reference, yet often their so-called facts are not facts. On page 166 of the present book the author makes Mary Stuart state, when on trial, that "Scotland is now in the hands of the traitor and tyrant Morton." The Regent Morton was executed on June 2, 1581, and consequently had been in his grave five years when the trial of his Queen occurred late in 1586.

On page 195 it is stated, as an excuse for the depravity of the Queen, that she was brought up while in France under the care of Catherine de Medici. On the contrary, she was at all times under the care of her maternal grandmother, Antoinette de Bourbon, a most excellent woman. Queen Mary was of the house of Guise, from first to last the enemies of the Florentine. It is certainly a fact that during the life of her husband, Henry II., Catherine had no sort of power, influence, or position. The marriage of Francis and Mary occurred before the death of Henry. Upon the accession of the boy King and Queen they passed under and remained under the influence of the Guise. For this reason Catherine hated her eldest son. She refused to allow the operation which would have saved his life; he died, and with him passed the power of the Guise. During the entire life of the Scotch Queen in France not one word was said against her, even by her arch-enemy, Catherine, who would have seized upon and made the most of any suspicion of wrongdoing. Queen Mary's most intimate friend at that time was her sister-in-law, Elizabeth, who married Philip II.—a woman whose beauty of character is a matter of record.

I have not read the accounts of the other four trials in this book, and but glanced into that of the Scotch Queen, but if the pages there are as full of errors as those I have noted they can scarcely be taken as historical records, however amusing they may be.

Ailsa Paige
A Romance of the Civil War
By
ROBT. W. CHAMBERS

"'Ailsa Paige' is an enthralling and wonderfully well wrought story of human lives. Mr. Chambers has triumphed again as a novelist of unusual versatility, whose books furnish the best kind of entertainment. In 'Ailsa Paige' the moving and absorbing drama is lightened by passages of wit and humor which are always in place and the apt and appropriate expression of the moment. The book is in a fair way to be the 'best seller' of the many 'best sellers' that Mr. Chambers has written."—The Press, Philadelphia.

IF—

If you talk with crowds and keep your virtue,
Or walk with Kings—nor lose the common touch,
If neither foes nor loving friends can hurt you,
If all men count with you, but none too much;
If you can fill the unforgiving minute
With sixty seconds' worth of distance run,
Yours is the Earth and everything that's in it,
And—which is more—you'll be a Man, my son!

LITERARY NOTES FROM BOSTON

Captain Mahan's Standing in England—Miss Crawford's Old Boston—Mrs. Howe's Last Long Letter

BOSTON, Oct. 21.—The reception given by Great Britain to Capt. A. T. Mahan's recent Daily Mail paper on British naval affairs is such a compliment to his discretion as has been received by few Americans who have ventured to talk or write on matters concerning the British Empire, and foreshadows an equally cordial greeting in London for his work, "The Interest of America in International Conditions," to come almost immediately from Little, Brown & Co. The book contains four papers: "The Origin and Character of Present International Groupings in Europe," valuable in spite of the turn given by Portugal to the kaleidoscope; "The Present Predominancy of Germany in Europe," and "Relations Between the East and the West," and "The Open Door." The most self-complacent American can see that the last two concern him, and any American with normal vision must perceive that he can omit nothing European or British from his calculations as to the future. The author spells himself "Captain" on cover and title page, but his countrymen will probably persist in giving him higher rank in spite of his mute protest. His D. C. L. and LL. D. they consent to neglect, but "Captain" does not quite agree with their conception of what is fitting. Further English political writers, sticklers for accuracy although they are, unblushingly set down "Admiral."

Miss Mary Caroline Crawford's "Romantic Days in Old Boston" will appear to-morrow with the same imprint as the Captain's book, and with a large collection of illustrations made with extraordinary judiciousness, the portraits showing the subjects at the most important moments in their careers, or, as in the case of the late Mrs. John T. Sargent, presenting a comparatively youthful face instead of that turned upon the world after a long career of beneficent work. The views show the aspect of many houses and public buildings long ago destroyed, and not included in many, if in any, collections of this sort, and they also present many characteristic streets and "places," once quaint, now either covered by tall blocks or altered into dullness. The frontispiece is Sully's picture of Fanny Kemble, and the theatres occupy a reasonable number of pages. Indeed, the most noteworthy characteristic of the text is the judicious distribution of space among the subjects, for the volume should be at least double its present size, and nothing receives full justice. The sooner Miss Crawford tells her story over again in a volume including the matters reluctantly omitted from this book the better. To add that if she could, without too much trouble, discover an upright pro-Slavery man it might add a feature now missing from her pages is as near as one likes to come to fault-finding.

"Voices from Erin," by Denis A. McCarthy, one of the few volumes of poems of the season, is to be published by this firm to-morrow, after some vexatious delays, and is sure of a warm reception, for the author is well known as dwelling in the safe middle ground between the mystic vagueness of the ultra "Celtic" school and the facile jingle of Moore's imitators. Some of his verse is intensely Irish, some devoutly Catholic, some is as heartily American as could possibly be expected, and some, "Her Courage," for instance, touchingly sweet and true in its homeliness. These poems are of the sort that make good Americans of wild Irish lads. And more of the wildest Irish lads read poetry than is guessed by those who stand aloof from them.

The heroine of Mr. Meredith Nicholson's coming novel, "The Siege of the Seven Sisters," to be issued by Houghton Mifflin Company, artlessly says in the course of the story that she has not thought of Indiana "as a place to which you could go on trains, but as an extinct place in Asia where lions crouch upon the ruins in the moonlight," which shows her knowledge of zoology. Her aunt replies that "Indiana is a commonwealth for which she has always had the greatest veneration," which shows her knowledge of history; but the story is not meant to instruct. It is a bit of fantastic fun-making, conceivably possible in these United States, but nowhere else. The scene is so near the borders of New York that all young architects addicted to chimney-doctoring in that region may expect to be accused of being the hero, especially if they be uncommonly clever. The story is full of riotous high spirits, and might be a pleasant exercise to compare it with Ian Hoy's "A Man's Man," and to mark the difference between the British and the American jest.

Mrs. Phelps Ward's book of short stories, "The Empty House," will accompany Mr. Nicholson's novel to the booksellers to-morrow; and also "In the Footprints of Heine," an account of a walking trip through the Harz forest, by Henry James Forman.

"Our House and the People in It," by Mrs. Pennell, with a vignette title page by Joseph Pennell, goes with them. Readers will find in its pages a new view of the rooms in which are enacted some of the most interesting scenes in Mr. E. V. Lucas's "Mr. Ingleside," and when they next visit London, they will discover a new tablet in a neighboring wall briefly repeating some of Mrs. Pennell's pleasant notes.

Mr. Walter Prichard Eaton dedicates his "At The New Theatre and Others" to Prof. George Pierce Baker of Harvard University, the founder of the pioneer course for the study of dramatic composition, "keen and catholic critic" and "inspiring leader in the movement for a better appreciation among educated men of the art of the practical theatre." The introduction is devoted to a history and characterization of the theatrical syndicate, and highly interesting it is. It is followed by a group of papers including nine criticisms of New Theatre performances; a second group composed of sixteen accounts of performances elsewhere, and a third made up of eight essays on matters and men more or less connected with the drama. This third group, with its papers on Clyde Fitch and William Winter, and its serious discussions of the influence exerted on children by the moving picture shows, and of the readiness of the poor and unlearned to patronize the best drama if it be offered to them is the most interesting of the three. Teachers of all grades and species will find it full of themes for thought and the police and the criminologist might well peruse them with care.

Sherman French & Co. this week publish Mr. David O. Batchelor's "The Unstrung Bow," a story supposed to be written by a lover of Anne Boleyn and secretary of Henry Eighth, who sends him to Rome to urge the desired divorce of Katharine of Aragon. Shipwreck and other mishaps make him Pizarro's comrade, and his forerunner at the Peruvian Court, which he describes with animation. The resemblance between the story and Mr. Robert Ames Bennett's "The Shogun's Daughter" is curious, and both end in a royal marriage for the white man. Will the coincidence be made three-fold by a romance based on the conquest of Mexico?

This season will bring at least one more novel from this firm, Mr. Clinton Scollard's "The Vicar of the Marches," a title indicating that he has found new scenery and actors upon which to spend his skill.

The day preceding the fatal chill with which her five days' illness began, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, in spite of her ninety-one years, with her own hand wrote a four-page letter to her friend Mr. Garrison of Houghton Mifflin Co., and neither in appearance nor in matter did it show the smallest sign of advanced age. Her juniors will have difficulty in approaching, much more in surpassing, her endurance and energy during her whole lifetime of varied activity. Fortunately she herself embodied the story of her busiest years in her "Reminiscences," published in 1899, but the record of her later days abounds in remarkable testimonials to the honor in which she was held in all circles. After all, her distinctive epitaph should be "Here lies an American gentlewoman." Who having seen her tried by the test of the good, or of the bad manners of others, would dispute it?

Besides Lewis B. Miller's "White River Raft," Dana Estes & Co. announce for boys "A Scout's Story," by Oscar Rhoscomyl, but is not, as might be supposed, written to aid the Baden Powell movement "to promote good citizenship in the rising generation." It is, on the contrary, a tale of treasure hunting in Patagonia, and has some fighting with savages added to give variety. Another adventure story to be issued by this firm is "The Giant of the Treasure Caves," by Mrs. E. G. Mulliken, who has a foundation of truth for her fiction and color half tones for its illustrations.

PHILADELPHIA BOOK NEWS

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 21.—A date has at last been fixed for the issue of a book which promises not only to be one of the most important of the Lippincott Fall list, but also one of the really significant publications of the year. This is "China Under the Empress Dowager," by J. O. P. Bland and E. Backhouse. Even if the book, which is to be ready on Nov. 1, covered no more than the history of the life and times of Tsu Hsi, the remarkable woman who ruled China with a rod of iron, it would be of profound interest to present day readers, for its authors write with authority of the inner history of the Chinese imperial court. One of them, Mr. Bland, was for years in the Chinese Government service under Sir Robert Hart, and both are familiar with the recent progress of Chinese imperial palace politics. This makes an absorbing story, but woven into it is a human document that is unique in the annals of modern history. It is no less than the intimate diary of Ching Shan, for many years the Controller of the Empress's household, a kinsman of the imperial family and the friend and confidant of the Empress Dowager herself. During the Boxer war, after the entry of the allies into Peking, Ching Shan was murdered by his son, and his diary was just rescued in time to save it from being burned by a party of Sikhs. The diary is a full and confidential record of the palace events during the last eight months of the writer's life, and besides throwing much light on the character and acts of "the Old Buddha," as the Empress was familiarly called by the Court, it contains a pathetic record of the old man's perplexities and troubles. In some ways this diary is the most remarkable Oriental record submitted to the judgment and criticism of the world for many years and it alone will make this work a noteworthy one.

The Tzu Hsi book will be preceded, however, by a sumptuous volume on the "Great Masters of Landscape Painting," from the French of Emile Michel. This will be ready the fore part of the coming week. The Lippincott publications of the present week include a delightful illustrated help to the study of nature, "Under the Open Sky," by Samuel Christian Schmucker of the West Chester Normal School. Prof. Schmucker is a devoted student of natural science and a successful teacher, and in this, as in other of his publications, he has had the assistance of Katharine Elizabeth Schmucker, whose colored illustrations adorn as well as illuminate the volume.. A couple of medical publications, "Applied Anatomy," by Dr. G. G. Davis, of the University of Pennsylvania, and a sixth edition of Dr. J. C. Wilson's "Fever Nursing" complete the list. A melancholy interest attaches to the recent issue of "Surgery and Childhood," owing to the almost simultaneous death of its author, Dr. J. DeForrest Williard.

The John C. Winston Co. are bringing out this week a beautiful gift book for children, announcement of which has already been made. This is their "Fairy Tales of All Nations," translated and edited by Logan Marshall. The editor has drawn from many famous sources for his material, and the tales have been embellished by thirty brilliant illustrations in color. The latter will make an especial appeal to young readers, for while they are highly colored, they are all especially suited to the subject and nationality of the tales, and are artistic besides.

Arthur Peterson has just completed and published a long poem based on the Sigurd legend.

QUERIES AND ANSWERS FROM READERS

"The Second Day of Creation" by Thomas Whitehead—"The Three Warnings" by Mrs. Thrale—John Newberry's "Chronology Made Familiar and Easy for Young Gentlemen and Ladies"—The Author of "The Petrified Fern"

COMMUNICATIONS intended for this column should be written on one side of the paper only. They must contain the name and address of the writer, though, if preferred by the inquirer, initials only will be printed. While the endeavor will be made to answer all queries of interest in the order in which they are received, this cannot always be accomplished.

E. T. L.—Can any of your readers give me the author's name and the full poem, the first verse being:

"This world I deem but a beautiful dream
Of things that are not what they seem,
Where visions rise giving dim surmise
Of the sights that shall greet our waking eyes."

My recollection is the author is or was an English clergyman.

The lines, which are not correctly quoted, are from a hymn written by Thomas Whitehead, and entitled "The Second Day of Creation." He was born in York County, England, in 1815, and was graduated from St. John's College, Cambridge. As chaplain to Bishop Selwyn he went to New Zealand, where he died in 1843. He was first Principal of the college that Selwyn established there, and he translated Bishop Ken's Evening Hymn into Maori. The hymn asked for is as follows:

THE SECOND DAY OF CREATION.

This world I deem
But a beautiful dream
Of shadows that are not what they seem;
Where visions rise,
Giving dim surmise
Of the things that shall meet our waking eyes.

Arm of the Lord!
Creating Word!
Whose glory the silent skies record;
Where stands Thy name
In scrolls of flame
On the firmament's high-shadowing frame.

I gaze o'erhead,
Where Thy hand hath spread
For the waters of heaven that crystal bed,
And stored the dew
In its deeps of blue,
Which the fires of the sun come tempered through.

Soft they shine
Through that pure shrine,
As beneath the veil of Thy flesh divine
Beams forth the light
That were else too bright
For the feebleness of a sinner's sight.

I gaze aloof
On the tissued roof,
Where time and space are the warp and woof,
Which the King of Kings
As a curtain flings
O'er the dreadfulness of eternal things.

A tapestried tent,
To shade us meant,
From the bare, everlasting firmament;
Where the blaze of the skies
Comes soft to our eyes,
Through a veil of mystical imageries.

But could I see,
As in truth they be,
The glories of heaven that encompass me,
I should lightly hold
The tissued fold
Of that marvelous curtain of blue and gold.

Soon the whole,
Like a parched scroll,
Shall before my amazed sight uproll,
And without a screen
At one burst be seen,
The Presence wherein I have ever been.

Oh! who shall bear
The blinding glare
Of the Majesty that shall meet us there?
What eye may gaze
On the unveiled blaze
Of the light-girdled throne of the ancient of days?
Christ us aid!
Himself be our shade,
That in that dread day we be not dismayed.

Mrs. W. O. CUNNINGHAM.—Will you please publish "The Three Warnings," written by Mrs. Thrale, the friend of Dr. Johnson?

It is much too long for these columns. It may be found in full in "The World's Best Poetry," Vol. VI. We have room only for a few lines.

"The tree of deepest root is found
Least willing still to quit the ground;
'T was therefore said by ancient sages
That love of life increased with years,
So much, that in our latter stages,
When pains grow sharp and sickness rages,
The greatest love of life appears.
This great affection to believe,
Which all confess, but few perceive,
If old assertions can't prevail,
Be pleased to hear a modern tale."

The tale is about "Neighbor Dodson," who, on his wedding day, is called upon by Death. They enter into an agreement that Dodson is to have "three several warnings" before he is summoned to his grave. When Dodson is in his eightieth year Death returns to find him still anxious to live. The poem ends thus:

"'Nay, then,' the spectre stern rejoined,
These are unjustifiable yearnings.
If you are lame, and deaf and blind,
You've had your three sufficient warnings.
So come along, no more we'll part,
He said, and touched him with his dart,
And now Old Dodson, turning pale,
Yields to his fate—so ends my tale.'"

ELSA THIELE.—Will you kindly tell me if there is any special value to a tiny book dated 1778 with the following title page: "Chronology Made Familiar and Easy to Young Gentlemen and Ladies, to Which Is Added a Table of the Most Memorable Events from the Beginning of the World. Being the Seventh Volume of the Circle of the Sciences." Printed for T. Carnan and G. Newberry, Jun., London.

It is dedicated to the Earl of Euston by John Newberry, and is quite worn, though the binding is firm.

There were two publishers of the name of Francis Newberry in London in 1778. One was the son and the other the nephew of John Newberry, publisher of many books for the young. It was the nephew who was in partnership with his uncle and to whom in 1763 Dr. Samuel Johnson sold the manuscript of Oliver Goldsmith's "Vicar of Wakefield" for £60. The other Francis Newberry was passionately addicted to the violin, and was described by a contemporary as "a scholar and a poet and a lover of music." He studied medicine and chemistry, but, on the death of his father, in 1767, he abandoned, on the advice of Dr. Johnson and Dr. Robert James, the design of a professional career and gave his attention to the business of patent medicine selling and publishing, which his father had created. T. Carnan was a relative of Francis Newberry's mother. The work on chronology does not appear to be of special value.

A. M. HARRIS.—Could you please tell me who is the author of "The Petrified Fern," given as anonymous on Page 158 of "Steps to Oratory" by Southwick? The first four lines are:

In a valley centuries ago,
Grew a little fern leaf, green and slender
Veining delicate and fibres tender,
Waving when the wind crept down so low.

The author of the poem referred to by our correspondent is Mrs. Mary Lydia Bolles Branch, a native and resident of New London, Conn. She is best known as a writer of stories for children. Some of her publications are: "The Kanter Girls," "The Old Hempstead House," "The Home of Eight Generations," "A Visit to Newfoundland," "The Manner of Life of Lucy Hempstead."

T. O. M.—Could you inform me as to where I can get all kinds of books concerning automobiles, their care and handling, and if there is any books concerning famous chauffeurs?

A large number of books on this subject has been published, among them "Operation, Care, and Repair of Automobiles," by A. L. Clough; "Making of an Automobilist," by H. A. Grant; "Automobile Catechism," by F. R. Jones; "Complete Automobile Instructor," by B. R. Tillson; "Motor Car Operation," by J. C. Chase; "Motor Car Mechanics," by G. F. Pedley, and "Practical Treatise on Automobiles," by O. C. Schmidt. The Professional Chauffeurs' Club of America, whose office is in this city, no doubt can give the desired information about "famous chauffeurs."

Answers from Readers

LEONARD B. ALMY—I see by your issue of September 3 that you were unable to give the information with regard to F. W. Bain, as I find the query in the "Appeals to Readers" column. This inquiry was made of the professor of Sanscrit in Harvard, and he stated that, in his opinion, Prof. Bain was not a translator, but a writer of fiction. The reviewer of the Nation, however, does as you do, and "gives it up," saying that he doesn't know.

R. FLEMING.—One of the three following books may possibly be what "J. J. D." wants, as mentioned in his inquiry of Sept. 10: "Industrial Cuba," by Robert P. Porter, with maps and 62 illustrations. G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1899. "Commercial Cuba," by William J. Clark. Illustrated. Charles Scribner's Sons, 1898. "The New-Born Cuba," by Franklin Matthews. Illustrated. Harper & Brothers. 1899.

A. L. M.—I have a copy of "Alice in Wonderland," a play, by Emily Prime Delafield, which may be what Grace McGowan Cooke wishes to find. It is compiled from "Alice" and "Through the Looking Glass," and was given with a cast of children for the benefit of the Society of Decorative Art in 1897. It is copyrighted by Dodd, Mead & Co., but the rights of performance are vested in Mrs. Lewis L. Delafield, Riverdale-on-Hudson, N. Y.

This appeal was also answered by Miss M. A. Gelson, Brooklyn; "A. W.," New York; W. E. W., Whitestone, N. Y.; T. H. Smith, New Haven, Conn., who writes that "Mrs. Burton Harrison has dramatized the tale under the title 'Alice in Wonderland, a play for children in three acts, with tableaux, songs, and dances.' The play is published by the Dramatic Publishing Company of Chicago."

T. F. D.—In your edition of Sept. 10, E. S. Torrey asks for the title of an old German poem. It is called "Allerseelen" (All Souls' Day), and is by Hermann von Gilm. Several English translations have been made of it and one of the best is the following.

Place near me here the fragrant mignonette,
The last red asters bear them not away,
And come recall the time when first we met—
Long since in May.
Give me thy hand that I may feel its glow
They all may see, I care not what they say,
One more fond loving glance on me bestow—
As once in May, as once in May.
On graves, devoted hands sweet flowers place
And masses for the dead are sung today;
Come to my arms and feel my warm embrace—
As once in May, as once in May.

There are also several musical settings. The best known two are by Straus and Lassen.

A. W.—I enclose herewith a copy of a sonnet asked for by "Searcher" in your issue of Sept. 17, a few lines of which were quoted, not quite correctly, from the Atlantic Monthly Calendar for 1908. It is one of a group of sonnets entitled "The Seven Days":

TUESDAY.

(Day of the War God.)

Fear not, O soul, to-day! Imperial Mars
Leads on the hours, a brave and warlike train.
Fire in his glance and splendor in his reign,
From the first glitter through the sunrise bars
Till his red banner flames among the stars!
Thou, too, go forth, and fully armed maintain
Duty and right. The hero is not slain,
Though pierced and wounded in a hundred wars.
The daring are the deathless. He alone
Is victor who stays not for any doom
Foreshadowed; utters neither sigh nor moan;
Death-stricken, but right onward, his fair plume
Scorched in the battle flame, through smoke and gloom,
Strikes for the right, nor counts his life his own.

FRANCES LAUGHTON MACE.

M. B. W.—I believe the inclosed is what Sidney H. Moore asks for in your issue of Sept. 17. I saw this printed in a high school paper, printed in Needham, Mass., about ten years ago:

ICH BIN DEIN.

In tempus old a hero lived—
Qui loved puellas deux;
He ne pouvait pas quite to say
Which one amabat mieux.

Dit-il lui-meme un beau matin,
"Non possum both avoir,
Sed si address Amanda Ann,
Then Kate and I have war.

"Amanda habet argent coin,
Sed Kate has aureas curls,
Et both sunt very agathae
Et quite formosa girls."

Enfin the youthful anthropos
Philoun the duo maids,
Resolved proponere to Kate
Devant cet evening shades.

Procedens then to Kate's domo,
Il trouve Amanda there,
Kai quite forgot his late resolves,
Both sunt so goodly fair.

Sed, smiling on the new tapis,
Between puellas twain,
Coepit to tell his love to Kate,
Dans un poetique strain.

Mais, glancing ever et anon
At fair Amanda's eyes,
Illae non possunt dicere
Pro which he meant his sighs.

Each virgo heard the demi-vow
With cheeks as rouge as wine,
And offering each a milk-white hand,
Both whispered, "Ich bin dein."

This appeal was also answered by William Abbott, New York city; Mrs. C. A. Robbins, East Orange, N. J.; Ernest Adams, New York city; and Chas. W. Sass, N. Y.

JOHN PHIN.—The song for which Maud Smith asks is by Thomas Moore and professes to be part of a translation of some Latin verses supposed to have been addressed by Hippolyta Taurella to her husband during his absence at the gay court of Leo X.

They tell me thou'rt the favor'd guest
Of every fair and brilliant throng;
No wit like thine to wake the jest,
No voice like thine to breathe the song;
And none could guess so gay thou art,
That thou and I are far apart.

Alas! alas! how different flows
With thee and me the time away!
Not that I wish thee sad—Heaven knows—
Still if thou can'st be light and gay,
I only know, that without thee
The sun himself is dark to me.

Do I thus haste to hall or bower,
Among the proud and gay to shine?
Or deck my hair with gem and flower,
To flatter other eyes than thine?
Ah, no, with me love's smiles are past,
Thou hadst the first, thou hadst the last.

Copies of the verses were also sent us by Charles H. Ditson and "S. M. C.," New York.

W. ABBATT.—Some time ago a query appeared from some one, whose name I forget, about a boy's book, which proved to be "The Young Islanders," but he who answered the query could not give the author's name. I can now do so. It is Jefferys Taylor. The publishers were D. Appleton & Co. 1842.

M. T. R.—In reply to the inquiry of E. Mel., in your issue of Aug. 20, let me say that Genevieve Grandcourt and Genevieve Clark, are names of the same writer—a woman quite as gifted as you say, yet one who seems overtaken by an unhappy fate. At least it seemed so at the time when I knew her, but with this article in the North American Review, one hopes that better ways have opened before her feet. Mrs. Grandcourt (born Clark), lived in the same house that I lived in for a short time, and since I left there I have not heard from her. At that time she told me her history and the history of her writing. When very young she had married a man whom she had known as a child, but her husband died within two or three weeks. Had there been any children the young widow would have been provided for, otherwise his income stopped with his death. Before marriage, when a very young girl, she had written a book which Julian Hawthorne praised—"not so much for the matter as for the manner, which promised so much for the future." Mrs. G. is a really handsome woman with very beautiful dark eyes, is a most entertaining talker and anything she writes holds one's interest and remains in the memory.

G. M.—Below is the correct rendering of Adam Lindsay Gordon's poem regarding which there was an inquiry from "H. C. E." in your issue of Aug. 13. There were some inaccuracies in the rendering offered by "F. C."

"Question not, but live and labor
Till your goal be won;
Helping every feeble stranger,
Seeking help of none."

"Life is mostly froth and bubble,
Two things stand like stone—
Kindness in another's trouble,
Courage in our own."

F. T.—The poem asked for by "J. N. P." in your issue of Sept. 17 consists of seven stanzas. The verses appeared in The Evening Post in February, 1868, and were signed with the initials "P. R. S." They are prefaced by a note by the editor of that paper to the effect that "the following clever verses will be relished by none more, perhaps, than by those whom they concern." They refer to the preaching of Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, an Episcopal clergyman, and rector of St. George's Church in this city, in a Methodist Church in

New Jersey which caused quite a flutter of excitement at the time.

The verses are as follows:

TYNG-A-LING-TING.

Oh, say! Brother Stubbs, have you heard how they talk
Of this horrid Low Churchman, who's coming from York?
And who vows that, next Sunday, he'll preach without gown,
In the Methodist meeting house here in our town?
Why it's all in the papers, and men, as they run,
Can read of the deed that will shortly be done;
It will empty our churches, for most of our sheep
Will take the occasion to listen and peep;
And for many a day will our parishes ring
With the tiresome jingle of Tyng-a-ling-ting.

Oh, what's to be done? Can't this outrage be stopped?
Can't our tottering pulpits, in some way, be propped?
Let's run to our Bishop, and tell him the news:
His reverence, doubtless, will shake in his shoes,
When he hears that without, nay against, our consent,
A son of the Church has declared his intent
To follow, so blindly, his Master's command,
And to sow his good seed on another man's land.
Come on, let us hurry to settle this thing
By stifling the chorus of Tyng-a-ling-ting.

So, straight to their Bishop a journey they make,
And at first the sad news makes him quiver and quake;
But his courage revives as their tale they unfold:
And he says, with an accent decided and bold,
"Dear friends, there's a canon long buried in dust
And terribly choked up with ashes and rust;
But we'll oil it and give it some wipes and some rubs,
And we'll load it with charges of Boggs and of Stubbs,
And then, as a paen of triumph we sing,
We'll fire it off with a Tyng-a-ling-ting.

So the Bishop he delves, and the Bishop he grubs,
And by dint of assistance from Boggs and from Stubbs,
The canon is dug from the rubbish which chokes
Its ugly old muzzle; and loud are the jokes
Which its obsolete pattern and straight, narrow bore
Excite in the crowd who are waiting its roar;
And then they compel our good Bishop of York
To bear all the grievance and stand all the talk;
And by night and by day dreary changes they ring
As they chime their sad anthem of Tyng-a-ling-ting.

And then to St. Peter's to open the court,
The judges and jury and counsel resort;
And a good Christian people with wide-open ears,
Are waiting to hear a priest tried by his peers,
And they call up the case, and the lawyers begin
To indulge in their usual professional din;
And by bitter invective and quibble and sneer
To show what a mass of corruption is here;
And really 'tis shocking! What charges they bring,
As they peal the loud slogan of Tyng-a-ling-ting.

Ah, me! 'tis a sight at which angels might weep!
'Tis a harvest of tares, for our churches to reap!
Sweet charity's presence has fled from the scene,
And good men lose temper and revel in spleen;
And the doubters and scoffers who relish such suits
Cry, "So these are Christians! come judge of their fruits!"
And the canon has burst, and with dissonance loud
Has deafened the ears of the wondering crowd,
And the pall of its smoke like a garment doth cling
To the walls that still echo with Tyng-a-ling-ting.

Oh! servants of Him whose sole mission was Love,
Do ye still hear as emblems the saint and the dove?
When ye read from your desks the sweet records that tell
How He preached in the Temple and taught at the well,
Do the sapient eyes of your wisdom detect
That He bounded your duties by parish or sect?
Oh! bid these small envies and jealousies cease!
Join all in one brotherly anthem of peace;
And when your glad voices in harmony ring,
They'll drown the harsh discord of Tyng-a-ling-ting.

Flushing Bay, Feb. 21, 1868.

A copy of the verses has also been received from Katharine L. Hill, Newport, R. I., who writes that the author of the verses was Peter R. Strong, who later in the year, (1868,) in April, wrote a sequel to "Tyng-a-ling," which he called "Mediaeval Pottery."

F. J. A. G.—The words of Carlyle quoted by Myrtle Reed in "Old Rose and Silver," and inquired about by your correspondent Mervyn Hawtrey in the issue of Sept. 24, are an adaptation from the last paragraph of Chapter IX. of his "Sartor Resartus"—"The Everlasting Yea"—which reads, "I, too, could now say to myself, 'Be no longer a Chaos, but a World, or even Worldkin. Produce! Produce! Were it but the pitifullest infinitesimal fraction of a Product, produce it in God's name! 'Tis the utmost thou hast in thee: out with it, then. Up, up! Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy whole might. Work while it is called To-day; for the Night cometh wherein no man can work.'"

This appeal was also answered by Maud Stoutenburgh Eliot, N. Y; "C. R. T.," Brooklyn; Anoush Ignatius, Troy, N. Y.; "B. G.," Philadelphia, Pa.; Charles L. Snell, Washington, D. C., and "P. C. H.," Clemson College, South Carolina.

O. B. LEWIS.—Replying to query of correspondent in REVIEW of Sept. 17, as to author of poem, "Alone with My Conscience," would say that it is said to be by Charles Tubbs, an Englishman. I believe it was first printed in The London Spectator about 1884. My information was taken from The Christian Union, Vol. 33, No. 12, Page 24.

Mrs. E. M. HUNTLING.—Perhaps George Millard Davison who asked about Virgil's lines "Sic vos non vobis," &c., and was given a translation in your issue of Aug. 10 will like to see the verses below on the same topic, which I find in my scrap book.

SIC VOS NON VOBIS.

Yes, Roman Virgil said it right; and 'tis an old, old story;
Not always he who does the deed is he who gets the glory.
You toil not for yourselves, O bees—another takes the honey;
Not for yourselves, O human hands, another piles the money.
The fame the poet true should wear, upon the rhymster blazes:
The prophet wins the frowns of men, the mountebank their praises.

But noble soul, if thou must lose thy nobleness in striving,
Content with only that on which some smaller soul is thriving,
If thou must yield the larger gift, thine aspiration another—
For all the glories of the world, say, wouldst thou be that other?
The angel of the Presence, on the paths of men pursuing,
Makes virtue still its own reward, and wrong its own undoing.
Still Providence, with steady hand and purposes unswerving,
Bestows the worthiest gift of all upon the most deserving:
The consciousness of noble aim, the rapture of endeavor,—
These most are his who most deserves and may be stolen never.

Be faithful, toiler of the world; where'er thy task is given,
It needs thy best—on earth as in the altitudes of heaven.
Work, caring much for excellence—for seeming, not a feather,
So shalt thou know the fellowship that binds great souls together.
And, with the larger wisdom filled, retell the ancient story,
Who does the deed shall have the meed; let others take the glory.

Appeals to Readers

C. M. S.—I want to find a poem of which the subject and perhaps the title is, "The Emerald Hathor." It starts with image of the Egyptian goddess Hathor, in a gem, and proceeds to develop the lasting through the ages of the things she personified, tho' called by other names. I read this in a magazine long ago, perhaps between 1870 and 1880. It was rather a long poem, perhaps three or four pages, and from time to time since I have endeavored to find it. I have a vague and perhaps inaccurate recollection that it was by Commander William Gibson, U. S. N. This latter possibly because I associated it for many years with the poem "Persephone," by the above author. This poem I found after seeking several years for it.

Also will some one give us "Salem":

"That ancient old city of Salem,
That never was builded by man,
* * * * * * *
Stood since the world began," &c.

This I think is not quite so far out of the general knowledge as the other. I clipped a copy from a newspaper, kept it for a long time, and finally lost it.

Miss C. D. CHAMBERS.—I wish to ask if your readers can give me the author's name and the whole of the poem quoted in part in Ralph Waldo Trine's "In Tune With the Infinite":

"I stay my haste, I make delays,
For what avails this eager pace?
I stand amid eternal ways,
And what is mine shall know my face."

J. A. MOTT.—Will some kind reader quote verse containing these lines, and give me name of author, also where occurring:

"It is the cruel artifice of fate
Thus to refine and vary on our woes
To raise our hearts and give us hope
Only to plunge us in the depths again,
And leave us doubly wretched."

LUCY A. YENDES.—Can any one give words and author of poem, "The Church and the World," beginning:

"The Church and the World walked far apart,
On the changing shores of time."

I saw it somewhere fifteen or twenty years ago, but can get no trace of it now.

M. L. D.—Will any of your readers furnish me with the name of the writer of the hymn, "Just for To-Day"?

A. L. BOWIE.—Can any of your readers furnish the poem containing the following lines:

Oft at his board an Eastern host felt bound
To pour one full libation on the ground;
This to refresh, he said, in genial trust,
Some poor wine-worshipper who sleeps in dust.

I am quoting these lines from memory, but I have forgotten the name of the writer.

H. M. NEWTON.—May I ask your readers to tell me about a poem entitled "Tom Twist." The first verse commences thus:

Tom Twist was a wonderful fellow,
No boy was so nimble or strong,
He could turn ten somersaults backwards,
And stand on his head all day long.
No wrestling nor running or jumping,
This tough little urchin could tire,
For his muscles were guttapercha,
And his sinews bundles of wire.

JAMES B. JONES.—I want a poem beginning

Three handspike raps on the for'ard hatch
And a hoarse voice shouts "Do you hear the news?
Reef topsails, all—'tis the old man's word,
Tumble up! Never mind jackets or shoes," and entitled "Reefing Topsails, the Way We Used to Do It." It was delivered at a "symposium" in New York about a generation ago, on the celebration of some poet's birthday.

OLD TESTAMENT ARGUMENTS.

HEBREW Institutions, Social and Civil, by J. B. Shearer (Richmond, Va.; Presbyterian Committee of Publication,) is an old-fashioned bit of biblical archaeology curious to meet with at this time of day. It is interesting for its thorough-going defense of all the institutions mentioned in the Bible, the subordination of woman, the priestly aristocracy, capital punishment for rebellious sons, and so on. It is therefore not surprising to find the last chapters of the book devoted to an ingenious defense of slavery as commanded by the Bible. Abolitionism is declared in the last chapter to be allied to atheism, or at least pantheistic rationalism, and to be opposed to divine truth. Judging from the place of publication, these last two chapters probably form the motive for the publication of an obsolete work.

NEW YORK LITERARY NOTES

Mrs. William Sharp's Account of Her Husband's Dual Personality—Books by Mrs. Wharton and Others

MRS. WILLIAM SHARP'S "Life and Letters of William Sharp" is out to-day under Duffield & Co.'s imprint. The work gives an account of Mr. Sharp's assumption of the fictitious literary character which he introduced to the world as "Fiona Macleod," and through which he brought out much of his best poetry. Mrs. Sharp's book is, in a way, the final clearing up of the mystery attending this strange dual personality involved in her husband's literary career, and gives besides many interesting reminiscences from the world of letters in which Mr. Sharp was prominent. The large octavo is fully illustrated. Coincident with the appearance of this biography, the seventh and final volume, "Poems and Dramas," of the uniform edition of "Fiona Macleod's Works," is issued.

This house brings out at the same time "Holiday Plays," by Marguerite Merington, containing one-act dramas for Lincoln's Birthday, Washington's Birthday, Fourth of July, Thanksgiving Day, etc., and three books for young readers: P. Guigou's "The Animal Trainer," a companion to "Animals in the Ark," translated by Edgar Mills, with the famous animal pictures by E. Vimar; John Rae's "The Pies and the Pirates," a shadow show in humorous verse, with scissors supplement, enabling the young reader to cut out the figures and stage the performance for himself, and Edith B. Davidson's "The Blowing Away of Mr. Bushy Tail," illustrated by Clara Atwood. To the Mediaeval Library is added "Ancient English Christmas Carols," 1400-1700, collected by Edith Rickert, with photogravure illustrations and brown pigskin binding, with clasps.

The Scribners are publishing to-day a new volume of short stories by Edith Wharton, "Men and Ghosts." This collection includes all of Mrs. Wharton's stories that have appeared in the last two or three years, among them the series known as "The Tales of Men." Another work of fiction appearing at the same time is Alice Duer Miller's "The Blue Arch," a love story of to-day marked by the kind of cleverness that distinguished Mrs. Miller's "Calderon's Prisoner" and "The Modern Obstacle." There is also a volume of essays by Stephen B. Stanton, "Soul and Circumstance," companion to the series, "The Essential Life," and dealing with what might be called "the imaginative transfiguration of existence." A study of the Servian people by the Servian Prince Lazarovich is also issued in two illustrated volumes. In this is given an account of the Servian government, religion and society, with an historical sketch.

Among importations offered this week by the Scribners is Francis Gribble's "Love Affairs of Lord Byron," a biography into which has been gathered considerable material not available at the time Moore's "Life" was written and Jeaffreson's "Real Lord Byron." There is also a series of reprints of noted works on eighteenth century furniture—"Chippendale," from the scarce first edition, 1754; "Hepplewhite," third edition, 1794; "Sheraton," 1802—and C. Hulton's translation of Prof. Pasquale Villari's "Mediaeval Italy From Charlemagne to Henry VII.," with photogravure frontispiece and sixteen other illustrations. This work, continuing Villari's "Barbarian Invasions of Italy," covers the period 800 to 1313.

Frank Danby's novel, "Let the Roof Fall In," the story of an old Irish family, is published this week by D. Appleton & Co. There is also "Corporation Finance," by Edward S. Meade, author of "Trust Finance," &c., a practical study intended for commercial colleges and High Schools, and "A Text-Book of Nursing," by Margaret Frances Donahoe, Superintendent of Nurses and Principal of Training School, Philadelphia General Hospital.

Three books are published this week by Harper & Brothers: "A Manual of Spiritual Fortification," by Louise Collier Willcox; "Through Five Administrations," by Col. William H. Crook, edited by Margarita Spalding Gerry, and a new edition of "Favorite Fairy Tales," with Peter Newell's illustrations. There are also reprintings of Kate Langley Bosher's "Mary Cary" and Paul De Musset's "Mr. Wind and Madame Rain."

A volume of essays, "Attitudes and Avowals, with Some Retrospective Reviews," by Richard Le Gallienne, is published this week by John Lane Co. The table of contents shows such subjects as William Watson, Tennyson, Lanier, Hawthorne, Meredith, Bjornson, airships, fairy tales, the profession of poet, etc. A profusely illustrated book by Robert and Elizabeth Schackleton on "Adventures in Home-Making" is also issued.

Another of Mr. E. V. Lucas's collections of letters by "entertaining hands" is published this week by the Macmillan Co. "The Second Post" is, in a way, a supplementary volume to "The Gentlest Art," and contains letters from Shelley, Stevenson, Dickens, Keats, Lamb, Carlyle, Landor, and many others. In the Friendly Library Series appears Mr. Samuel McChord Crothers's "Book of Friendship," an anthology compiled from the writings of a large number of famous authors. In the Citizen's Library of Economics, Politics, and Sociology is issued "Child Problems," by George B. Mangold, Ph.D., Associate Director of the St. Louis School of Social Economy. The book treats of such subjects as the Playground Movement, the Medical Inspection of Schools, the Milk Problem, the Juvenile Courts, the Probation System, etc. There is also issued another of Mr. Clifton Johnson's books of American travel: "Highways and Byways of the Rocky Mountains," containing fifty illustrations, and descriptive of all the region between the Mississippi valley and the Pacific coast.

Mr. Louis Joseph Vance's "No Man's Land," a story of mystery, the scenes of which are laid in this country, is published this week by Dodd, Mead & Co. Among Illustrated Gift Books there are: "The Girl I Left Behind Me: A Romance of Yesterday," by Weymer J. Mills, an international romance of sixty-odd years ago, with many full-page pictures in color by John Rae; a new edition of Milton's "Comus," with facsimile pages of the Bridgewater Manuscript and numerous portraits in tinted photogravure of the Earl of Bridgewater and his family, for whom and by whom this classic was originally produced, edited by the Lady Alix Egerton; "In and Out of a French Country House," a sequel to "Three Normandy Inns," by Anna Bowman, copiously illustrated from photographs by Mr. Robert Demachy; "Famous Sculpture, Described by Great Writers," compiled by Esther Singleton, with 48 illustrations.

Four books of an historical nature, published this week by Dodd, Mead & Co., are: "Love Intrigues of Royal Courts," in which are collected many of the famous romances of history, by Mr. Thornton Hall, author of "The Road to Riches," etc.; "The Beautiful Queen: Joanna of Naples," a story of the fourteenth century, by Francesca M. Steele; "The Making of a King," giving an account of the first thirteen years of the life of Louis XIII of France (1601-1614), by I. A. Taylor, author of "Lady Jane Grey and Her Times," etc., and "A Gascon Royalist in Revolutionary Paris," an account of Baron de Batz, who planned to rescue Louis XVI on the day of his execution, by M. G. Le Notre, author of "The House of the Combrays," etc. There is also published "Stories of Shakespeare's Comedies," by Mr. H. A. Guerber, author of "Stories of Famous Operas," etc. The plots of thirteen comedies are given here as they are presented on the stage, the book being designed as an aid to "reader, playgoer and student."

This week this house brings out Miss Alice MacGowan's story of the civil war, "The Sword in the Mountains," the scenes of which are laid in the mountain regions of Kentucky and Tennessee. Mrs. Florence S. Barclay's novel, "The Rosary," is also issued in a special holiday edition, with illustrations in color from original paintings by Mr. Blendon Campbell. "Ribbon Roads," appearing at the same time, by A. T. and B. R. Wood, is an account of an automobile trip through Great Britain and Ireland, France, Holland, Germany, and Italy.

Six books are brought out this week by Doubleday, Page & Co.: a volume of Kipling's "Collected Verse," containing numerous illustrations, eight of which are in color, by W. Heath Robinson; two new volumes in the Every Child Should Know Series, "Earth and Sky," by Julia E. Rogers, and "Folk Tales," edited by Mr. Hamilton W. Mabie; "Second String," a story of modern English life with London and a country house for the settings, by Anthony Hope; "On Christmas Day in the Evening," a story by Mrs. Grace S. Richmond, author of "On Christmas Day in the Morning," and "Water and Game Birds," by Chester A. Reed, published in cloth and leather editions.

A further chronicle of Pearlie, who figured in Mrs. Nellie McClung's "Sowing Seeds in Dannie," has just been published by Doubleday, Page & Co. under the title "The Second Chance." "Rewards and Fairies," in cloth and pocket leather editions; a new series of tales of Dan, Una, and Puck, by Rudyard Kipling, containing four illustrations, is also published, together with O. Henry's last story, "Let Me Feel Your Pulse," issued in the series of Comic Masterpieces. A new illustrated edition of "The Fairy Ring" of the Children's Crimson Classic series, and "The Flower Guide," by Chester A. Reed, are also published.

"The Toll of the Arctic Seas," an outline of Arctic exploration, including biographical matter, of the explorers from Barents to the present time, illustrated by photographs, drawings, maps, etc., by Mr. D. M. Edwards, is published this week by Henry Holt & Co., who also bring out "Judith," a new drama, based on the apocryphal story, by Mr. Martin Schutze, author of "Hero and Leander."

Three books just published by Moffat, Yard & Co. are "The Diary of a Refugee," kept by a Louisiana woman in 1862, giving glimpses of the early days of the war in the extreme South, by Frances Fearn; "The Church and the Individual," an interpretation of the church as a social institution in the midst of a new order of things, by Frank Ilsley Paradise, and "The Gift Wife," a novel by Rupert Hughes, in which the hero, a young American surgeon, "after a temporary detachment of personality, (to use the terms of modern psychology), much to his astonishment, discovers himself a patient in a Turkish harem, cared for by a charming veiled woman, the superfluous and unnoticed wife of a local Prince, to whom she had been presented by the Sultan."

The sixth and final volume of "The Political History of England," edited by the Rev. William Hunt, late President of the Royal Historical Society, and Reginald Poole, editor of the English Historical Review, has just been published by Longmans, Green & Co.

A new novel by Will Irwin, "The Readjustment," is to be published this fall by B. W. Huebsch. The story is descriptive of San Francisco life before the fire, and is described as "a novel of psychology as well as action." Another novel is "The Black Cross Clove," by James Luby, in which the hero is a New York artist, the heroine a New York girl, the scene shifting from the metropolis to the Catskill Mountains. An Indian legend runs through the story.

"Mothers and Fathers," by Juliet Wilbor Tompkins, mentioned in these columns recently, has just been published by the Baker & Taylor Co. A novel of the week, descriptive of shepherd life in England, is "Silverwool," by Emily Jenkinson. Other books just appearing from this house are "The Steps to Nowhere," by Grace Duffie Boylan, with eight pictures in full color by Ike Morgan, described as a modern fairy tale, commencing with Gramercy Park, New York, and going back to Dutch New York, Captain Kidd, the Aztec kingdom, Panama, etc.; "Robin Hood" and "The Arabian Nights," by Clifton Johnson, author of "The Country School," etc., the first and second volumes in a series of Golden Books for Children in preparation by this author, each volume containing eight illustrations; and "The Zodiac Birthday Book," a gift volume intended to appeal "to all who dabble in astrology and to many who have never touched this fascinating subject," by Beatrice Baxter Ruyl.

The Alice Harriman Company of Seattle has opened permanent and main offices at 542 Fifth Avenue, New York. This is the only woman publisher of books in this city, and the only one in the world whose firm name indicates her sex. The business is only two years old, but is growing most gratifyingly, with two "best sellers"—non-fiction—already on its list. Their Autumn list has, at its head, a posthumous work of Lafcadio Hearn's—a translation of Gustave Flaubert's "The Temptation of St. Anthony." Other books are "The Master Road" by Carlin Eastwood, already dramatized and accepted by a famous producer; "A Man of Two Countries," by Alice Harriman, a novel of politics in Montana, with illustrations incorporated in the chapter headings; "Mrs. Featherweight's Musical Moments," by John Brady, a skit on musical New York, illustrated by the author; "The Diamond Spider," by Elinor Brotherton Butler, a religious fairy-story, profusely illustrated; and "The Superintendent," a story of the Northwestern sawmills, by Irene Welch Grissom, that makes a strong temperance appeal.

A NEW book, which assumes, with a fair show of reason, to correct one of the errors of history, is "Louis XIII à Vingt Ans," by Louis Battifol. According to M. Battifol, Louis XIII was a masterful and not, as tradition has it, a weak character. He knew perfectly well what he was about, M. Battifol affirms, when he made Richelieu his Prime Minister; and, far from being the tool of the great Cardinal, he obliged the latter to carry out his large schemes for the development of his kingdom.

OUR FOURTEENTH ANNIVERSARY

The Autumn Book Number of this "Review" will appear to-morrow, in connection with the Sunday issue of The New York Times. Among its many interesting features will be a classified list of nearly one thousand books of the season.

HARPERS BOOKS

My Mark Twain
By William Dean Howells

Now and then there comes a book, written from the heart, a book which, without meaning to, tells all about the writer, his hopes and fears and loves and aspirations. This is that kind of a book—a little bit of a book which will live when great books are forgotten. It is the story of the unswerving affection—(one might almost say love)—of one man for another, and the mere recording of the trust and friendship and sympathy between these two make a story greater than any fiction because it is true. It ought to be called "The Story of Two Life-Long Friends." It is tender and true and mellow, and altogether lovable.

Imaginary Interviews
By William Dean Howells

Mr. Howells's philosophy in these Easy Chair essays is distinctly of the inclusive order, and the wide range of subjects treated is indicated by the following titles from the thirty-odd that make up the volume: "The Practices and Precepts of Vaudeville," "The Superiority of Inferiors," "Unimportance of Women in Republics," "The Quality of Boston and the Quantity of New York." Surely Mr. Howells has taken the earth for his possession; but has he not gone up and down in it for seventy-odd years? It is his right to speak and our privilege to listen.

Through Five Administrations
By Col. William H. Crook

The author's material has been adequately and sympathetically edited by Margarita Spalding Gerry, author of that striking Lincoln story, "The Toy-Shop." Colonel Crook was Lincoln's bodyguard before and at the time of his assassination. When Crook was drafted for army service, Lincoln kept him, saying, "I can't spare him." It is certainly a unique gallery that contains five Presidential portraits, including Lincoln and Grant.

Round the Year With the Stars
By Garrett P. Serviss

The book tells you how to know the stars and when and where to expect them. Just what everybody can know and ought to know about astronomy—no more. No one has done more than Mr. Serviss to popularize real knowledge of the stars, and he writes with infectious enthusiasm. "Star-gazing," he says, "is great medicine for the soul." One doesn't need a telescope or even an opera glass—it is naked eye astronomy.

Mark Twain's Speeches
With Introduction by W. D. Howells and Preface by Mark Twain

This new book reveals Mark Twain in a new and interesting phase. Mark Twain was first of all a lecturer, almost before he began to write. In this book are both his earliest and latest lectures and speeches. They are all humorous in style and method. It naturally follows that they cover almost every conceivable subject, from weather and women to politics and fishing. In point of time they cover a little more than half of his life.
